F çaxsapat, etc. the Sanskrit word sikhâpada became a l.-w. in Sogdian as çîfîb, no doubt originally in translations of the Buddhist scriptures, and from Sogdian became a l.-w. in Turkish, usually with the same spelling except for the last letter. It was adopted by the Manichaean missionaries, with other Buddhist technical terms, to translate 'commandment', but in Buddhist terminology was often used more vaguely to translate 'good behaviour', Sanskrit śîla, see TT VI, p. 66, note 157; it was adopted, for some obscure reason, as the name of the 12th month of the Uyg. calendar, see Doerfer II, 627. ciğın/ciğkin Preliminary note. There is some confusion about words of this form. There was almost certainly in the medieval period a Dev. N. fr. çiğ-, çiğin 'a knot' noted in XIV Rbg. R III 1358 (quotn.) and Çağ. XV ff. Vel. 242, although San. 220r. 24 says, rather unconvincingly, that this is a mistranslation. This word now seems to be obsolete. There was also a word çiğin meaning 'the upper part of the shoulder between the neck and the shoulder-blade' (Red.) (perhaps etymologically the same word in the sense of 'the part which ties the neck to the shoulder-blade') noted in Çağ. Vel. 242, San. 220r. 22, current in Osm. fr. the earliest period and still current there and in Tkm., and in Az. as çiğin. Kaş. lists two words of this form meaning respectively 'a kind of plant' and 'a kind of silk fabric'. San. has two parallel entries, but in each case quotes alternative forms with -e- in the first syllable, which suggests an original -ë-. In the latter case the word survives with -ë- so this is unlikely. In the former San. lists different plants with -k- and -g- in the middle. As no such plant names seem to survive, the number of plants involved, and the pronunciation, remain obscure.

PU çülig this word has been read in Türkü viii I 4 E 4, II E 5 in the list of countries which sent representatives to Eştemî Xağan’s(?) funeral; it begins ‘from the east, where the sun rises’ Bükli: (PU) Çülg el Tavğaç Tüput, etc. in the “The Date of the Early Sogdian Letters”, BSOAS XI 601 ff. showed that Bükli: meant ‘Korea’; Tavğaç is of course ‘China’ and Tüput ‘Tibet’; as the list is presumably in a strict geographical order, the entry between Korea and China must be some unidentified ‘realm’ (el) between Korea and China, perhaps one of the minor kingdoms in Korea. The word looks like a Chinic representation of some name like chi li(ıg). It has been read as cüllûg and explained as a P.N./A. fr. çol meaning ‘belonging to the steppes’, but this is impossible since çol is a Mong. word which is not traceable as a L.W. in Turkish earlier than Çağ. xv ff. Vel. 252; San. 214v. 15. The word is perhaps to be connected with the equally unexplained word (PU) çülgî: in Türkü viii (I searched for a guide and çülgî: Az. erl: butum T.23. Az is a tribal name (see Az Preliminary note), so çülgî: is prob. a place-name. ‘I found an Az man from Çülgî.’ The suggested translations ‘distant’ and ‘strange’ are purely hypothetical since they do not rest on any solid etymological basis.

1 čar in the onomatopoeic jingle čar čur, which survives in SW Rep. Turkish in such phr. as čar čur et- 'to squander, dissipate'. The phr. was no doubt colloquial and is not noted in the Osm. dicts. 1 čer Hap. leg.; it is hard to see what hıkída means 'here'; it can hardly mean 'onomatopoeic', perhaps 'a word used only to form Den. V.s'. Cf. čerlet-, čerlen-. Xak. xi čer 'a hıkída for great bodily weight' (an iqálti'badan); hence one says er čerlenedi: 'the man's body was heavy' (taqala). A Xakāni word Kaš. I 322.

2 čer Hap. leg.; 'time'; cf. ďq; it is possible that this was the Oğuz equivalent of ďq, which is not recorded in any Oğuz language except XX Anat., but if so it was displaced by l.-w.s like wqıt and zarınan at an early date. Oğuz xi čer al-wqıt 'time', hence one says bu: čer-likde: kel 'come at this time' (i.e. 'now') Kaš. I 323.

3 čer (?čer) Hap. leg.; it is prob. that this is merely an Oğuz form of šer 'place', and that Kaš. gave it this meaning owing to the erroneous belief that it is connected with čerš, a word almost certainly older than the Oğuz sound-change y- > c-. Oğuz xi čer the opposite of something' (qubālātš-šay'); hence one says anıŋ evit: bu: čerlikde: 'his house is opposite this thing' (šic, but ?his house is in this locality); hence čerš is used for 'the two battle ranks' (raʃāʃy'-l-harb) because they confront one another (yatagāباحlan) Kaš. I 323.

1 čırg an onomatopoeic; survives, with slightly different shades of meaning in NC Kir. čırg and SW Osm. čırg Red. 743 (only); it is possible that SW Osm. čırg/čırg 'sparrow' is an extended meaning of this word, and that the Çağ. word below has the same meaning. Xak. xi čır an onomatopoeic for the sound (al-sawt) produced by tearing (min masq) a garment, etc.; hence one says anıŋ tonın čırg yırttu: 'he tore his garment with this sound' (muṣawwiṭa(n) lahu) Kaš. I 323: Çağ. xv ff. čırg 'the name of a bird which flies about in large flocks' (fawc fawc) San. 218r. 2 (quoth.).

Vu 2 čırg Hap. leg.; 'fat'; the words used to translate it suggest a rather more solid commodity than yaşq; al-dasam seems to mean 'dripping' or more generally 'fat', al-sahm is usually 'suet', but al-simmāq normally means 'the pericranial membrane', here perhaps more generally 'membrane', and al-samn is more usually 'clarified butter' than 'fat' proper. In the absence of any known connecting link the resemblance to Russian zhir 'fat, suet' is prob. a mere coincidence. Xak. xi čırg 'fat' (al-dasam); one says eşichte: čırg yo:k 'there is no fat in the pot'; its origin is 'the membrane on suet' (al-simmāq mina'l-sahm); hence one says bu: ette: čırg yo:k 'there is nothing in the way of suet or fat(yaʃ mina'l-sahm wa'l-samn) on this meat' Kaš. 1 čơr a Turkish title rather rare in Turkish texts and perhaps commoner in the Chinese records where it is represented by cho (Giles 2.421). It is stated in the Chiu' T'o T'ung Shih that Liu Mau-tsai, the Chinese envoy, in Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken (T'u-hine, Wiesbaden, 1938, p. 158) that Kutluğ Xaŋan, before he became Xaŋan, was a hereditary toðun čơr, and his brother, who became Kaŋgan Xaŋan, is always called by the Chinese M'o-cho (see op. cit., passim) which appears in Tibetan script as hIg-Cor, and perhaps represents *BvoieG: čơr: There is also a reference (op. cit., p. 170) to the 'Cor of the five To-loci (Tölis) tribes of the Left Wing of the Ten Tribes (i.e. the Western Turks)'. A čơr therefore seems to have been something less than a xaŋan and more than a beq, perhaps the head of a small confederation, cf. elteber, ěr irkin. As regards the pronunciation, the Middle Chinese pronunciation of cho, though uncertain, is likely to have been nearer chor than chur and the Tibetan transcription čơr points in the same direction. Türkü viii (Vu) Tağıḳ Chor I E 32; Tardus Ingu: Čor I N 13; Kül Chor the leader of the Tardus beq's II S 13; Işvara: Targan Čor Yaqb: Ongin 4; ěx. is a memorial to Kül Čor and Tavşaq: its name is well known in China (pronounced hlan, Middle Chinese t`ak bat); the name is probably of Central Asian origin. Tavşaq is a Turkish tribe whose name is recorded in Chinese texts of the 13th century. It is known that this tribe traded with China and the Islamic world during this period, and it is possible that the name Tavşaq was used by the Chinese to refer to the Turks who traded with them.

According to the Chinese records, Tavşaq is a tribe that traded with China and the Islamic world during this period. The name is well known in China and is mentioned in the T'ang Shih (a Chinese history book) as a Turkish tribe that traded with China.

It is possible that the name Tavşaq was used by the Chinese to refer to the Turks who traded with them. It is known that the name Tavşaq is recorded in Chinese texts of the 13th century. The name is well known in China and is mentioned in the T'ang Shih (a Chinese history book) as a Turkish tribe that traded with China.

Tavşaq, the name of a Turkish tribe transcribed in Chinese t’o po (Giles 11,336 9,335; Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese t’ak bat); the emperors of the Yuan Wei Dynasty which ruled China a.d. 386 to 535 belonged to this tribe, and the Türk, who deservedly first came into contact with China during this period, called China Tavşaq. Apart fr. the references in Chinese texts, the name is first mentioned in literature by a Byzantine chronicler, Theophanes Simocatta, who wrote in the second quarter of VII and mentions Tavşaq (pronounced Tavşag) as ‘a famous city inhabited by the people called Tourki’ (see G. Max, Byzantoturcica, Budapest, 1943, 11255). This form proves that the word was at this period pronounced Tavşaq and should be thus transcribed in the Türk texts. It would, however, be rash to analyse it etymologically as a Dev. N. in -šaq fr. *tav-, since this Sufi normally forms N.İ.Ş. tavar (d-) originally 'livestock', a meaning which comes out clearly in the phrase ed tavar 'inanimate and animate property' (see ed), and from an early date, since livestock was the commonest form of property in Turkish society, 'property' in general and even specifically 'merchandise, trade goods'. As Ar. māl is equally ambiguous, the exact meaning in some medieval texts is obscure. An early 1.-w. in Mong. as tabar (Haenisch 143) and Russian as tavar, both in the second sense. The first was prob. borrowed in NE Alt., Leb., Tel. tabar R III 466 and the second in several modern languages in the Soviet Union; but the word seems to survive genuinely in SE Tūrkī tavar 'silk goods, trade goods (generally)'; SC Uzb. tawar (perhaps the origin of the Russian word); NW Kk. tawar 'goods' and SW Osm. davar 'livestock'. The text appears to be a page from a book discussing language and verb conjugations. It includes several key points:

- "tavrat- (d-)" is mentioned, possibly referring to a verb or verb conjugation.
- "topra-k" is discussed, with mentions of "topra:-", "toprap-," and "topraka:-".
- "tavratamak" or "tavranu:-" is noted, suggesting a verb form.
- "tavranmak" is mentioned, indicating another verb form.
- "tavranu:- (muvahhat kordan usunhadden 'to set in motion')" is highlighted, indicating a focus on verb conjugation and motion.

The text also contains references to Sanskrit and other languages, indicating a comparative study of verb conjugations. The presence of verbs such as "tavranmak" and "tavranu:-", along with the discussion of "tavrat- (d-)", suggests a comprehensive analysis of verb forms and their usage in different linguistic contexts.

(D) tavişgan: hare’; an old animal name ending in -ğan. This word has a very long history; it was a pre-vii l-w. in Kitan as (PU) taišli, see V. S. Starikov and V. M. Nedelyaev, Predvaritel’noe soobščenie o deshifrove kaidashkogo pis’ma, Moscow, 1964, p. 10, fr. which it passed into Mong. as taołai (Haenisch 145); these words represent, of course, the L/R Turkish form *tavişgān. It was one of the animals of the twelve-year cycle in Turkish and Mong. Survives in SE Türk tawşkan, etc. jarring, p. 297, and in several SC, NW, SW languages, see Scherbak, p. 136. The SW Az. form is dovşan and in Osm. and Tkm. both t- and d- are noted, the former prevailing; initial d- is therefore improbable. In other languages the word for ‘hare’ is koyan (kögan). See Doefer II 966. Türk vii keylk yeyli tavişgān yeyli ‘eating wild game and hares’ T 8: viii ff. IrkB 44 (üpüş-): Uyg. viii tavişgan yil ‘in the Hare Year’ Şu. E 8: viii ff. tevey (d-) ‘camel’. There is real doubt about the original form of this word; the oldest recorded form is teve; but it became an early, First Period, l.-w. in Mong. as temeyen/temen (Haenisch 148; Studies, p. 234) which presupposes a final -y. Kaş.’s main entry, III 225, is spelt clearly tevey and occurs in a Section headed ‘fa’al, fa’il, fa’ul with various vowels on the second consonant’, the third being alif, in word or ya’. Nearly all the words in the Section end with long open vowels, e.g. tapa; tapi: and it could be argued that tevey was intended to be an ‘Arabic’ spelling of teve: like ma’mā, which also has a final ya’, but this is improbable in itself and inconsistent with the simultaneous spelling of the Oğuz form deve: with final alif. It seems clear therefore that Kaş. meant the word to be pronounced tevey, and this was prob. the original form. S.ı.a.m.ıp.; see Scherbak, p. 193; the NW Bashkir, Tat. and SW Az., Gagauz, Osm., and Tkm. forms mentioned there all begin with d-, which was prob. the original initial. See Doerfer II 1015. tuç (tuç) an alloy of copper, no doubt in an early Turkish context 'bronze' (copper and tin), rather than 'brass' (copper and zinc). 1. tat the basic meaning of this word, which is translated very variously, seems to have been not so much 'stranger', which is 1 yat, as 'an alien', prob. a subject, but in any case inferior. Radloff (III 899) says that he had personally heard of it only as applied to a section of the Tatar population in the Crimea; his quoth. fr. Budagov goes back to Vel. As regards SW Osm., Leh. Osm. 286 (repeated in R III 899 and Sami 370) says that it was a word applied to the old Iranian and Kurdish populations of the provinces absorbed into the Ottoman Empire and hence came to mean 'miserable, destitute'. tet-), tıd-, ttt-, till- Preliminary note. It is reasonably clear how many Verbs of each of these forms there are, but, as they are usually graphically indistinguishable, it is often difficult, and in damaged passages like U III 25, 15 (i) and TT III 112 impossible, to determine which Verb is concerned.

the Infin. in -ma:k, but the Dev. N. is vocalized with hasra and ends in -lg. The -lg can hardly be a mistake and, since Infin. terminations tend to be erratic, it can be taken as certain that this V. had a front vowel, but the position of the main entry before tut- suggests that the damma is correct and the word may have been tőt- or tüt-. D tatîg (in Kaš. under the heading fà'îl) Dev. N. fr. tat- (tat-) rather than tatçç; 'taste, flavour', often with the implication of 'a pleasant taste'. This is the only form of this word in the early period and it still survives as tatû in NE, NC, but fr. the medieval period a syn. word tat appeared, which survives in all other language groups. There is no good reason for supposing that it is a really old word. Uyğ. viii f. Man.-A tatâg M III 12, 17 (i) (1 teş): Bud. in Bud. terminology tatîg 'taste' is normally the fourth of the six senses, see Tt VI 174 f.; U III 37, 30-1 (1 aşçç)— in Swv. 118, 7 tatçç must mean concretely 'tasty food', (if any are suffering from hunger and thirst) adrûk adrûk tâş tâşûk tatççlûr üze todûrdaci bolaym 1 will be the one who satisfies them with various wonderful (Hend.) tasty foods'— in Swv. 590, 23 ff. the seven uğûq of the body are enumerated as 'flesh, blood, tuttâq, skin, bone, marrow, and olûq(?)'; this seems to be an error for tutâq: Cis. tatççlûr bütünûke tâşê te'tir it is called a support for the preparation of tasty foods' TT I 191; o.o. do. 187, 199: Xak. xi tatçç al-êdâj 'a pleasant taste', one says in a jingile (fl-izdîwê) tatçç tatçç Kaš. F totoğ l.-w. fr. Chinese tu-tu (Giles 12,050 12,057; Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese tou tofok) 'military governor' (of a district or region). As pointed out in Doerfer II 874, where numerous occurrences of this word are collected, the correct transcription is totoğ and not tutuğ, as it has usually been transcribed, but see tutuğ. In Turkish it occurs both in the transcriptions of Chinese names and as a title given to Turks by the Chinese Emperor or, very prob. in some cases, assumed by Turks themselves. tođun (hitherto transcribed tođun, but the Chinese transcription indicates tođun, cf. totok); a Türkü title of office. It occurs fairly frequently in Chinese records regarding the Türkü, where it is spelt tu tu'n (Giles 12,100 12,232; Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese tou duan), see Chavannes, Documents sur les Tou-kiue (Turcs) occidentaux, St. Petersburg, 1906, Index s.a. 'Tu 'dun. In the list of Turkish offices in the Chiu T'arg Shu, Chap. 194b. (Chavannes, p. 21) the tu-'tun occupies the 7th place, coming after the hsieh-li-fa (életber); when T'un Yavgu:, who was the Western Türkü xagan in the first quarter of the 7th century, conquered foreign countries he gave his rulers the title of életber, but sent a tođun to supervise them and collect the taxes (Chavannes, p. 24); the word appears in these records, as an element either first or second, in P.N.s, e.g. Tü'n tođun and Tođun Şad (Chavannes, Index). By xi the office had obviously lost importance. N.o.a.b. in Turkish texts. See Doerfer III 1194. tûg- (d-) n.o.a.b.; the Caus. f. tûgur- is equally rare, except in the Ger. tûgoru; q.v., which still survives; the general connotation seems to be 'to go straight for (something Acc.)' disregarding such things as curves in the road. Türki viii (wading through the swamp). Kökmen yîsîg tûg- yon: 'marching straight on (or through?) the Kökmen mountain forest' I 35, II E 27; (we marched) [altun yîsîg] tûgâ: 'going straight through the Altai mountain forest' I 36–7 (II E 27 substitutes asa: 'crossing').

tûg- (d-) 'to be born', with some extended and metaphor. meanings. S.i.a.m.l.g. The vowel is -u in TT VIII and all modern language groups except SW where the form is in Az., Ösm., Tkm. is doğ-. In the medieval period the Verb became Trans. ?I) taki: (d-) prima facie Ger. of taki- used as an Adv., but there is this difficulty that there is no evidence that taki- was ever *dak- while the evidence that this word originally had d-is unusually strong. It is most often used in the early period as a Conjunction at the beginning of a sentence meaning 'and, furthermore', or after one or two words meaning 'also', but there are other usages which need a special study. S.i.a.m.l.g., sometimes as takl/tağı or dakl/daki (in NC Kk.; NW Kk. both tağı and dakl occur), sometimes (NE Tuv.; SC Uzb.; NW Kaz.) in the extended form tağın, sometimes as an enclitic ta/te/da/dé is common; in Osm. two forms daxi 'and, also' and dánh 'more' evolved; in Tkm. only dağı. D tokac 'a loaf or cake'; Kaʃ. may be right in linking this word with tok; if so, it is a Dim. f. Survives with the same meaning in SE Tar. togaç R III 1160; Türki tokaç; SC Uzb. tokac. Osm. tokac 'a maltel, a bat (for beating washing)' seems to be the same word with the meaning changed owing to a supposed derivation fr. tokir-. Xak. xir tokac (qaf unvocalized, the damma in the printed text is an error) al-gurṣ 'a loaf or cake', taken from the phrase tok er 'a man who is satiated' (al-ṣabān), because it satiates him (yuṣbu'yuḥu) Kaʃ. () tuğur- (d-) Caus. f. of tuğ-, q.v.; survives in SE, SC in the normal meaning 'to give birth to' and in NC Kir. (where tu- means both 'to be born' and 'to give birth to') tuğur- (1) 'to give birth to' (lit. and metaphor.); (2) 'to deliver a woman (of a child)'. Xak. xi teğri: qınu tuğurdu: awluva julhul�-watad mınal- -mar'a 'God caused the child to be born of the woman'; originally tuğurtdi: (sic, but ?tuğurdu: in the original text). This is in accordance with the rule, which is that if a verb is a Caus. f. without the attachment of -t- (ilhapa'ta) then when a -t- is attached to it it makes it Causative in such a way that the Object (al-elif) is operated upon by two Subjects (al-fıllan), one of whom gives an order and the other performs an act; for example suyu içürdi: ayılabalı-ma 'he gave (someone) a drink of water', but if one says suyu içürdi: (sic, but ?çiürtdi: in the original text) it means 'he ordered someone else to give (someone) a drink of water'; again ol ani: boğdı: means 'he strangled him', but if one says boğurdu: it means 'he ordered someone else to strangle him'; there is the same difference of meaning in Ar. between laqata and alaqata and naqata and anaqata, where the addition of a makes the verb Causative with two Subjects (falılom) operating on the Object Kasım II 173 (tuğurur, tuğurmak; MS. boğurur, boğurmak; it is probably that it was a copyist, and not the author, who made nonsense of this para.; the translations of içür- and içür- are identical in Kaz.; there is no other trace of içür-, which is clearly the form required by the words ida ulihqat bihil-ta').

teğ (d-) Postposn. 'like'; together with üçün, üzef and birle: one of the 'four old postposns.' discussed in K. Grünbech, Der türkische Sprachbau, Copenhagen, 1936, p. 35. When attached to the oblique stem of of of it soon became fused with it as antaq, q.v.; later it became similarly fused with the oblique stem of I bu: S.i.a.m.i.g. except SW where it is replaced by other words like Oguz qbit (kb); the vowel varies between -e, -a, and -i, and the final between -g and -y, but the initial is consistently d- everywhere. Türkü vlll tepri: teg 'god-like' I S 1, I N 1, a.o.o.; Uyg. vlll ff. At. biltiq teg 'like wisdom' 100; a.o.o.: xiv Muh. Adverbs of comparison. The commonest is teg, and some of 'our Turks' change the t- to d- when it is (attached) at the end of a word; e.g. 'his tongue is like a sword' dill: kükç deq; 'this is as sweet as honey' bu da:tlur: dur bail deq Mel. 18, 4; til: ... teg; süçüd teg Rif. 96; Çaq. xv ff. the word is mentioned several times in San. as adat-i taðibh 'Adv. of comparison'; the forms quoted are deq 17r. 24 (quotns.); 226v. 3 (quotns.); teg 198r. 15: Xwar. xin(?) teg (or deq?) is common in Qg., e.g. adakû ud adakû teg 'his legs were like an ox's legs' 12: xiv teg 'like' Quth 176; teg MN 5, etc.; Nahc. 263, 15; 387, 15: Kom. xiv 'like' dek/dey CCG; Gr. 82 (quotn.): Ktp. xiv deq mitl 'like' Id. 49.

tek Preliminary note. There was certainly a word tek meaning 'only', which is not mentioned in this meaning by Kaş.; it seems likely, however, that his translation 'for no particular purpose' is a misunderstanding of it. There was also certainly a word tek meaning 'silent ly' which is generally used to qualify tur-, and must be carefully distinguished fr. tik which is similarly used. There is a modern word in NC Kzx. teg/tek 'family, origin', which Radloff, certainly in error, read in some early texts; in Türkü vlll ff. Yen. Mal. 28, I the correct reading is prob. tegme: 'all'; in Xak. xi KB the readings are all due to scribal errors in the Vienna MS., in 344 akran teki for evren başi; in 950 teqin for teqin and in 1630 teginde for beqinde. A word tek 'under' first mentioned in Çaq. xv ff. San. 157v. 24 and surviving in several modern languages looks like a corruption of Ar. tabh, which is the word used to translate it in San.

1 tek 'only'; survives with some extended meanings, 'alone, solitary, odd (not even) in NC Kzx., several NW languages and SW Az., Osm., Tkm. Uyg. vlll ff. ?F tik (d-) 'straight; vertical, upright'; hence (of a cliff) 'precipitous' and the like. S.i.a.m.i.g. except NE?; in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. dîk; almost the only word in Kaş. which preserves the original d-. A l.-w. in Pe. Deorfer II 1905. As he points out, practically syn. w. Chinese chih (Giles, 1,846, Fulleyblank, Middle Chinese qish), and prob. a l.-w. fr. It. Its relationship to Mong. çike (Kow. 218) is obscured on balance it is perhaps more likely to be a l.-w. fr. Turkish than direct fr. Chinese, although the unvoiced initial and the fact that the Mong. word has Sec. meanings peculiar to Chinese point rather in the other direction. Xak. xi 'when a thing is vertical' (ida'nasaba-l-jay) qâ'ima(n) one says dîk turdu: Kaş. I 334: (xiii(?) D tildir- (d-) Caus. f. of til-; s.i.s.m.l.g., usually as tildir-. Tildir- in Kaş. follows
semantically it is nearer teiltur-, but the text is in some disorder and it is followed by biltur-, tamtur-, etc.; the scribe was obviously confused between -t- and -d-, but biltur- is misplaced in any event. VUD tuldur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of tulur-. Xak. xi atlaq anu tuldurdi: 'the horseman (etc.) collided with him' (aadamahu) Kaʃ. II 175 (no Aor. or Infl.). PUD tellur- Hap. leg.; the passage occurs in a list of the unpleasant results of sin; the spelling is quite clear in the MS.; v. I. C. suggests that it means 'to make (someone) dream', connecting it with tell, this is possible only by assuming a homophonous V. and N. of this form, but there is no other trace of VU *tıl- or this verb, and no convincing sense is given by assuming that either this word or tuldur- is mis-spelt. Uyg. VIII ff. Man. tūug üze olurup (so read) tülürür (the demons) 'sit on your chest and?' M II 17, 12-13.

VUD toldur- Hap. leg.; this verb is listed in a Chapter devoted to disyllables, in a small section containing three other verbs all of which are onomatopoeics; the vocalization is chaotic; in the case of this verb the I and d carry cayms in the Perf. but are unmarked in the other tenses; in the case of the other verbs the third consonant usually carries a kāra, but this seems to be an error. Prima facie a Den. V. fr. *toldur, possibly onomatopoeic 'to clatter away' or the like. Oğuz xi boý (mis-spelt toý) toldurda: taفاراق:ل-ناس min kull cāntib 'the people scattered in every direction' Kaʃ. III 447 (toldurra:r, toldurra:mk). Trls. DLD

D tila:k (d-) 'the spleen'. Survives in NW Osm. dila:k and prob. all modern language groups, but the kind of word often omitted fr. dicts.; l.-w. in Pe., see Doerfer II 925. XVI ff. ditak/tilak (also dîlcîk) 'elictoris' in several Ar. and Pe. dicts. TTS II 292, 893; IV 217.

D tili:q P.N./A. fr. til; 'having a tongue'. S.i.m.m.l.g. usually w. a preceding qualifying Adj., 'having a . . . tongue'; but tiliq in some NE languages means 'eloquent' and SW Az., Osm. dik. 'glib, voluble'. Xak. xi yavla:k tiliq bēg 'a foul-mouthed husband' Kaʃ. VUD tuluk Hap. leg.; the meaning can only be conjectured; the editors suggest a connection with modern word forms similar meaning 'wine-skin' and the like, no doubt der. fr. to:-, but this is not very plausible; the meaning seems rather 'barrier', or the like, which is a possible meaning for a Pass. Dev. N./A fr. tul-. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. D talku: prob. a crasis of *talkçu: Dev. N. fr. talk-; survives in NE Tel. talku; NC Kir. ditto; Kzx. talki; NW Kaz., Nog. ditto 'an instrument for working leather while it is being tanned'. It is difficult to see the semantic connection of the Nakh word with this, but it is connected with the meanings of other der. f.s. Xak. xi anything 'spun or twisted' (naftul mudawer) is called talku; hence a 'twisted cord' is called talku: yışış. Kas. I 427.

D talguç: Hap. leg.; abbreviation of *talkçu: N.I. fr. talk-; 'a toggle' and the like. Xak. xi talguç: 'the name of the piece of wood (al-xaqaba) which is inserted between a package (al-īdāl) and the cord (round it)'; the cord is twisted several times (yuftal ... faftala), until the cord is stretched (yuqadd) and the load secured (yuqadd), so that the package cannot shift (fā yu'awwara) Kas. I 469.

D tolaga: (d-) Dev. N. fr. tolga-; lit. 'twisting, something twisted', and the like; Kas. give three meanings; in the third 'snow-storm' it is vocalized talaga: this meaning is not found elsewhere, but there is no reasonable doubt that it is the same word in the sense of 'something swirling'. It is possible that the Uyğ. word was a parallel Dev. N. in -k, tolka:, which would have had the same meaning, and most modern forms seem to go back to this word rather than tola:; they include NE Şor tola:k; Khat. tolga:k; Tuv. dolga:k 'twisted, intertwined,' and the like; SE Türkī tola:k 'birth pangs'; NC Kir. toloq:tolog: ditto, and 'the act of twisting; pressing, urgent' Kzx. tola:k ditto; SC Uzb. tolog: 'birth pangs'; NW Kh., Nog. tolog: ditto; SW Az. dolog; Osm., Tkm. dolog 'puttes'; Uyğ. viii ff. D toluk: (d-) 'an inflated skin container, or bladder', and more generally 'a skin container'; morphologically a Pass. Dev. N.A. fr. toluk-, Emphatic Pass. f. of tol-, which is traceable as doluk- in SW Osm. fr. xvi onwards (TT'S I 216; IV 236), and still survives in xx Anat. SDD 456. The latest trace of this word is in SW Osm. Red. 1261; it is now obsolete everywhere. Uyğ. vii ff. Man. Wind. 22-4 (1 ür-): Xak. xi toluk: al-ziqq-ul-manfūx fīhī 'an inflated skin' Kas. D talkt- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of talk-; this must be the correct form, it is the vocalization of the Aor., elsewhere the vowel signs are absent or wrong. Xak. ol anıp ışın talkittu: 'he urged someone to obstruct (awoowa) his business'; and one says ol yünkü: talkittu: 'he urged someone to push the load into position' (yuşdim̄ul-haml); also used when one orders someone to secure it (bi-tislâhi) with a rod (mirba'a) which is inserted between the cord and the load and twisted (yuftal) until the load is straight (yuftaqım) Kaş. D tolgan- (d-) Refl. f. of tolg'a:-; s.i.m.l.g. with extended meanings; in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. dolan- 'to rotate, revolve; to circulate, saunter about', and the like. Úyg. viii ff. (bulgan- and) tolgan- Tuh. 26a. 3 (these descriptions should be reversed?).

VUD tolgar- Pec. to Kaş.; the vocalization and etymology of this verb are most obscure; of the six occurrences the first syllable is vocalized tal- six times with the alternative (two vowel signs) tol- once, nevertheless considering the meanings tol- is almost certainly right; the second syllable is -gur- four times and -gur- twice. The word can hardly be a Caus. f. since it is Intrans., and the likeliest explanation is that tolgar- is a Trans. Den. V. and this verb an Intrans. Den. V. from *tolği in which case the correct form of this verb should be tolgar-. Xak. x kölgüm tolgârd: 'my constitution (safsi) was almost thoroughly upset (read tatamawwac for tatahawwac in M3.) when it was revolted (laqsiat) by eating putrid food' (tolgårur, tolgarmak); art baş: tolgârd: 'a snowstorm rose (qâmatî'l-damaq) over the head of the pass' (etc.) Kaş. 1 tamğa: an old word ending in -ğa; not semantically connected with 2 tamğa; originally a ‘brand’ or mark of ownership placed on horses, cattle, and other livestock; it became at a very early date something like a European coat of arms or crest, and as such appears at the head of several Türkü and many O. Kr. funerary monuments, see L. P. Kyzlasov, ‘Novaya datirovka yeniseiskoi pis’mennosti’ (Sovetskaya arkeologiya, 1960, III) and ‘O datirovke pamyatnikov yeniseiskoi pis’mennosti’ (do. 1965, III). It was the word used for a Chinese ‘scale’ and passed into Mong. in this meaning as tanmaža (Kew. 143). S. i.a.m.i.g. w. some phonetic variations; in SW Az., Osm. damğa; Tkm. tagma; a l.-w. in Pe. and other foreign languages, see Doerfer II 933, where the word is discussed at great length. F tümen properly 'ten thousand', but often used for 'an indefinitely large number'; immediately borrowed from Tokharian, where the forms are A tumān; B tume, tumane, but Prof. Pulleyblank has told me orally that he thinks this word may have been borrowed in its turn fr. a Proto-Chinese form *tuman, or the like, of ten 'ten thousand' (Giles 12, 486). It became an early L.-w. in Mong. as tüme(n) (Haenisch 154) and in Pe. as tume'n and other foreign languages, see Doerfer II 983, where the word is discussed at great length. VÜD I 1 tomur- (of the nose, etc.) 'to bleed'; n.o.a.b. This meaning would be very appropriate for a Caus. f. of tam-, and it is tempting to regard this as a Sec. f. of tomur-, particularly since the word is occasionally so vocalized in Kaş, but there is no doubt that the first vowel was rounded, and a sound change -a->-o- is unlikely at this period even before -m-. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. kan tomurmakka em 'a remedy for nose bleeding' II 1 126, 129 (specifically in the nose, in both cases the remedy is inserted in it); a.o. do. 181 (berntin-): Xak. xi er burnu: tomurdi 'the man's nose bled' (ra'da) Kaş. VÜD 2 tomur- prima facie Caus. f. of VÚ tom-; 'to cut in a rounded shape'. Hap. leg. (but see tomur, tomüş-) unless it survives in NE Tel. tomur- 'to cut through (a log)' R III 1238. The first vowel is uncertain; SW Osm. tomruk 'a bud; a boulder; a lump of wood' seems to be a Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. it, and this, taken with the Tel. V. would point to -o-, but in Osm. 'the rounded beak (of a bird)' is pronounced tomuşk, whereas in all other languages, including Tkm., it is pronounced tumuşk, and this looks like a parallel Dev. N. fr. *tomuş-, Recip. f. of *tum-. Xak. xi (following 1 tomur- and one says er yığaç tomurdi: (kasra as well as damma on mim) 'the man cut a piece of wood in a rounded shape (qata'a ... müdafavara(a(n)) like the base of a column' Kaş. Vu 4 taq (tëg) Hap. leg.; the vowel is fatha, but this word comes after l. taq where damma or kasra might be expected; perhaps a l.-w. Xak. xi taq 'any building (binda) which once existed, of which the superstructure (MS. Vu/F 6 taq occurs several times in commercial documents in Uyg. viii ff. Civ. as a measure of capacity for seed cotton; it must have been a fairly large measure since in USp. 2 the rent of a piece of ground for growing cotton was 'ten taq kebesh', and USp. 70, 6 (büğür-) relates to a transaction involving borrowing four taq kebesh in the spring and returning seven in the autumn. Perhaps to be connected with Pe. tang 'a donkey load', but this word also means 'half a load', and in this sense looks like a l.-w. fr. I teq, q.v. It is, however, unlikely that I teq should be read in these Uyg. passages.

1 teq (d.) basically 'equal' (to something else), hence 'equivalent' (to something else) and, of the two pans on a pair of scales 'level' (equal to one another). S.i.a.m.lg.: in NE Tuv.; SW Osm., Tkm. deq. A l.-w. in various foreign languages including Pe. With these forms and meanings these Pe. words were reborrowed by some modern Turkish languages, e.g. Rep., Turkish denk. While there is no reasonable doubt that the Chinese word têng was a l.-w. in some early languages, see 2 teq, the theory that it was also the origin of this word (see Döerfer, loc. cit.) is untenable since the meanings are quite different. Türkî viii ff. Yen. yaq(ka) tegmis sü tegî: yetî: bîn oğlan tertî 'he knew the value (?) of the people' do. 32, 3 (both readings very dubious): Uyg. viii ff. Perhaps to be connected with Pe. tang 'a donkey load', but this word also means 'half a load', and in this sense looks like a l.-w. fr. I teq, q.v. It is, however, unlikely that I teq should be read in these Uyg. passages.

1 teq (d.) basically 'equal' (to something else), hence 'equivalent' (to something else) and, of the two pans on a pair of scales 'level' (equal to one another). S.i.a.m.lg.: in NE Tuv.; SW Osm., Tkm. deq. A l.-w. in various foreign languages including Pe. following passages seem the clearest cases of this word, but there are prob. others where it has been mistaken for 2 taŋ and thus transcribed. Türkî viii ff. Man. TT II 8, 58 (oyun): Uyg. viii ff. Bud. teŋ aðmîc cigar ertiŋ yiŋčû various kinds of jewels and pearls’ PP 34, 1-2; o.o. of teŋ aðmîc do. 71, 5; Khun. 149.

E 3 teŋ a word so transcribed and translated 'marsh(?)' (Brockelm.) 'lake' (Atalay) has been read in a verse in Kaŋ. I 528, 9-10; it is not vocalized; it is very unlikely that a word with this meaning should be a Hap. leg. Kaŋ. 's translation of the verse is 'it describes wild fowling and says "when the goose (should be "duck") saw me in that pool (al-ğudar) with a blunt arrow, this bird (the kaşgâlak) dived into the water'. It will be noticed that the last word of the first line (ata:n in the MS.) is not translated. The likeliest explanation is that al-ğudar is a scribal error for al-ğadâ and that the verse read taŋda: bîle: körse: meni: ördeken əter kalva: körüp kaşgâlak suvka: batar: 'the duck seeing me at dawn quacks; the kaşgâlak seeing (my) blunt arrow dives into the water'.

tîn (d-) Kaŋ. has two main entries tîn ‘breath’ and tîn ‘rest’, but it is unlikely that the distinction in length is semantically valid since elsewhere 'breath' is consistently spelt tîn (note also that there are two main entries for 'bridele', tîn and tîn). Indeed it is likely that the same word was used for 'breath' and 'rest' (i.e. stopping to take breath). It is significant that this is one of the rare cases of a homophonous N. and V. and that the V. is translated both 'to breathe' and 'to rest'. The two words have therefore been treated as identical. Tîn ‘breath’, sometimes by extension: 'spirit, life', survives in all NE languages; NC Kâr. (also dîm); NW Kâz., Kk. NE Tel. (RII 1342), Khak. also have a word tîn ‘silent’ which seems to be a Sec. f. Türkî viii ff. Man. tîn turtəp the God of the Zephyr(?) Chius 34, etc. (see tîrât): Uyg. viii ff. Man. tîn turtəp M J 21, 1; Bud. VU tîn Hap. leg.; meaning doubtful. It has been suggested that this is the basis of tipla:-but this is very dubious. Uyg. vii ff. Civ. tîn the exact meaning is doubtful; the likeliest is ‘halter’, or ‘leading-rein’, but ‘bridle’ and ‘rein’ cannot be excluded. Survives in NE several dialects (RII 1360), Khak. and Tuv. (dîn). Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (then the prince) rîn tintin tartap (sic) 'reining in his horse' USp. 97, 3; a.o. do. 20 (kcurd): Xak. xi tîn al-miqwad 'halter'; hence one says tîn tizgîn migwed tay ann ‘halter and rein’ Kaŋ. VU tîn Hap. leg.; exactly synonymous with tik. Xak. xi one says er tîn turdi: intaqabâl-rracal qâ’tîma(n) ‘the man stood upright’ Kaŋ. III 356.

ton (d-) ‘garment, clothing’. Si.a.m.l.g., in most modern languages for 'outer garment, overcoat'; in SW Az., Osm. don; Tkm. don. It has been usual for some years to describe this as a l.-w. fr. Saka fauna 'clothing', but it is unlikely that the Turks would have had no native word for 'clothing', and there are difficulties about the initial sound; the resemblance is therefore prob. due to coincidence. tanu:- this V. presents some difficulties, since it is hard to reconcile its various meanings; there may in fact have been two almost homophonous V.s, tamu-: (d-) 'to suggest, recommend, discuss', and the like, and tanu: (t-) 'to be acquainted with (someone)', the latter not noted before xv. This is supported by the fact that there are in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. tani - 'to be acquainted with', and tanis - 'to be acquainted with one another' and in Az., Osm. (but not Tkm.) damin - 'to consult one another, discuss'. The latter is pec. to SW, the former s.i.a.m.l.g. See tanuk 'witness'. There is some doubt about the first vowel; in the main entry, it is shown twice as -1- and once unmarked; in II 281 12 it is -o/-u- but perhaps only because the word rhymes with yunciz-; in III 303 11 it is -1-, but a philological note is added in which it is given as -a-; and in the Co-op. f. it is three times given as -a-. D tonat- (d-) Caus. f. of ton:- Den. V. fr. ton:-, which is not noted in Turkish before xv, Ça$g. San. 185v. 7, but was old enough to become a xiii l.-w. in Mong. as tono- (Hainisch 151), could etymologically have two opposite meanings ‘to put clothes on (oneself or someone else)’ and ‘to strip clothes off (ditto)’. The two early occurrences are both in the latter sense, and the V. survives for ‘to rob’ as tonata- in NE Khak., NC Kız. and tono- in Kir., and as tonma- (?) for tonla-) in Tuv., but NE Şor tonma- means ‘to dress oneself’. Most of these words have a Caus. f. Xak. xi ol meni: tonattu: ‘he dressed me in a garment (albasan‘i‘-ta$ch) as a gift from himself’ Kaş. II 312 (tonatur, tonatmak; its origin is ton ma$ça: ‘he sent him a garment’): Osm. xiv ff. donat- (occasionally tonat-) (1) ‘to dress, fit out (someone)’; (2) ‘to cover with abuse’; (3) ‘to equip’ (e.g. a ship); fairly common TTS I 218; III 205; IV 237.

D tünet- (d-) Caus. f. of tüne:- ‘to put (someone) up for the night’. S.i.s.m.l. in this meaning. Xak. xi ol konu$uk evде: tünetti: ‘he put up (abâta) the guest in the house for the night’ Kaş. D tüpît- (töpîd-) n.o.a.b. but see topta-; for the etymology see töpîd-; as the Caus. f. tüpîder- means ‘to invert’ and the like this V. is presumably Intrans. meaning ‘to bow down, bend down, move downwards’, and the like, başın in the quotations. Below being in the Instr. and not the Acc. with Poss. Suff. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. PP 19, 4 (I bas): Xak. xi er başın tüpîtti: ‘the man lowered (tata$') his head’ (etc.) Kaş. head upwards again; Procyon (?) and Sirius (?) moved downwards again' 6220.

E toptar- has been read in the passage below but certainly mistranslated. The letters to and ts are quite clear, the slim letter between them is not. It cannot be a front -ts- or as Radloff originally suggested, both because it would be out of place here and because there is no known V. tosat-/tosat-. Malov's 1959 reading toka- is impossible both because there is no room for -k- and because toka- is a Mong. l.-w. which did not occur in Turkish before xiii at earliest. The obvious course is to read it as toptar- and take it as an alternative form with back vowels of topt- parallel to the Uyg. form with back vowels of tóđer-. VUD tundur- Caus. f. of tön-, q.v. regarding the first vowel. Survives as tundur- in several NE languages and NC Kir., Kxz. but the semantic connection with the latter is dubious. PU tağan the first letter is undotted and unvocalized in the main entry, which entirely follows the heading -N in a list of words containing three consonants of which the second is -ğ- and the first anything except y-; as for practical purposes b- never precedes -ğ- in Xak., the word can hardly be anything except tağan. In the second occurrence the first letter is y- but this certainly is an error. The translation suggests that it was 'a hooded crow, Corvus cornix', or 'a jackdaw, Corvus monedula'. tepri: a very old word, prob. pre-Turkish, which can be traced back to the language of the Hsiung-nu, III B.C., if not earlier. It seems originally to have meant 'the physical sky', but very early acquired religious overtones and came to mean 'Heaven' as a kind of impersonal deity, the commoner meaning in the earlier texts. It was the normal word for 'God' in Man. and Bud. texts and was retained in this sense in the Moslem period, although it is rare in KB, where the normal word for 'God' is hayat, and was later largely displaced by l.-w.s like Allâh and xudâ. An early l.-w. in Mong. as tegeri (Haenisch 148, Kow. 1697; but often spelt tpir, as in Turkish, in religious texts and always dpir in the P'ags-pa texts). S.i.a.m.l.g., in NE often in the Mong. spelling, in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. tpir, this is prob. an old Oğuz pronunciation, but it is impossible to discover when the change occurred; a l.-w. in Pe. see Döerfer II 944, where it is discussed at great length. Türkî viii tepri: ne common in üzé: kök tepri: aşra: yağız yer klindukda: 'when the blue sky above and the brown earth below were created' I E 1, II E 2 it clearly has a physical sense, but this is rare; it is more often used in a religious sense, e.g. tepri: yarlıkladukun üçün 'because Heaven so commanded' I S 9, II N 7, and even as a sort of tribal deity in üzé: Türkî tepri:ši: the Heaven of the Türk on high' I E 11, II E 10: viii ff. tepri: is fairly common in IrkB, both in a physical sense, e.g. (a hawk) tepri: din (sic) koçi: . . . kapmîs: 'swooped down from the sky' 44; and in a religious sense, e.g. ala: atîg yol (or yul) tepri: men 'l am the god of the road (or the spring) riding on a dappled horse' 2: Man. tepri (consistently spelt tpir in all scripts) is very common; yər tepri: yok erken öğre 'when earth and heaven did not yet exist' Chuar. 162-3 it has a physical sense, but nearly always means 'God' or 'divine': Yen. üzé: tepri: yarlıklad: Mal.

E teñir-: Hap. leg.; this V. occurs in a Chapter in which the order of words should be determined by (1) the last consonant; (2) the second consonant (3) the first consonant; following savrä-, sekeri-, semrri-, sanri-, and preceding kevve-, kökrê-, külre-; there are in any event errors in the arrangement and from time to time after (1) the order seems to be determined more by (3) than by (2); in any event teñiri- could not properly follow sanri-: or precede kevve-. The second consonant is fairly clearly -n- in the facsimile, but in a word which was almost certainly unknown to the scribe this might well be a misconception of -f-, for -v-; tevve- would in fact suit the meaning well, if taken as cognate to tevülr- although the morphological connection is obscure. Xak. xi annî başi teñirdî: axada ra'sahu hâl-davîr 'something like dizziness attacked his head', that is when sleep overcame him and he resisted it and there resulted a feeling of ants crawling in his head for lack of sleep Kas. törü: (törö): 'traditional, customary, unwritten law'; one of the basic political terms of the Turkish pagan period. It was closely associated with 1 ēl and xağan in the sense that it could not exist without a 'realm' as its sphere and a 'ruler' to administer it. It was adopted as a religious term both by Buddhist and Manichaean missionaries in the sense of 'a rule' subordinate to the prescriptions of the true doctrine or religious law, no:m, q.v. In Xak., where it was still common, it meant 'custom, customary law', as opposed to the religious law of Islam (al-sari'a) and prob. also to the arbitrary decrees of rulers. It became an early l.-w. in Mong. as dörü/töre. It is not clear whether the form tör current fr. the medieval period onwards, and still surviving in some NW languages including Kar. T., R III 1250, and SW Osm. is a direct survival of the old word or a reborrowing fr. Mong. and some confusion arises from the fact that it is homophonous with the word for 'prince' and the like in these and other languages, see tör: A certain in Osm. its true origin was so far forgotten that in Sami 449 it is spelt tura and described as a l.-w. fr. Hebrew torah. S tarak Sec targaql.

D tariği Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. taru-; has two basic meanings (1) 'cultivated land', which is somewhat attenuated in the phr. tarış tariğ , almost syn. w. tariğ ; (2) 'the produce of cultivated land', usually some kind of grain. Survives in NE Khak. tariğ 'sowing', as in spring sowing, sowing area; Tuv. tara: 'crop, grain crop, cereals, millet'. Elsewhere tariğ in most languages; NC Kir. taru:; SW Az., Osm., Tkm. dani means 'millet'. In modern times confused with Pe. dârû 'medicine, drug', which has come to mean 'gunpowder' and is a l.-w. in the last sense in several languages, usually as tariğ . This confusion may have produced the d- in the SW languages since tarih låg has become tarla not darla in those languages. Türkü VIII ff. D 1 toruk(d-). Intrans. Dev. N./A. fr. 1 tur. Morphologically this word, and not toruğ, q.v., must be the earlier form of a word meaning 'place of residence, stopping place', NC Kir., Kxz.; NW Kk. Nogay turok; SW Osm. duruk (Az. Dim. f. duracâq) and SC Uzb. turok 'a foot' (in the metrical sense). In the early period it means 'having stood still for some time', hence (of water) 'pure', clear, free from sediment' and, more generally, 'pure'. F tarxan (darxan) a title of great antiquity, prob. pre-Turkish discussed at great length (144 pages) in Doerfer II 879. In spite of his scepticism, Prof. Pulleyblank's theory in 'The Consonantal System of Old Chinese' Asia Major, N.s. IX, 1962, p. 91, that it represents the Hsiung-nu title of their supreme ruler, than-yîn (in Old Chinese *dân-yîn for darxan) seems the best explanation yet of its origin. Like tâğîn it forms its Plur. in -t, tarxat, for *tarxa(n). It is likely that in this word the Runic and Uyğ. K represented x, cf. the form in Kaş. In Turkish it had ceased to be the supreme title and was not even, like têgîn and şad, peculiar to the royal family, but it was still a high title, and prob. carried administrative responsibilities. In this sense it cannot be traced in Turkish after XI. It became an early L.-w. in Mong. as darxhan (Haenisch 32, Kow. 1676) where it meant not much more than 'a person exempt from ordinary taxation', and later merely 'artisan, craftsman'. The occurrence in Çağ is no doubt a reborrowing fr. Mong. Tükri VIII (in the list of persons to whom the inscription is addressed; my younger brothers, sons, united clan, people, in the term the şadapti begs) yırına: tarxat buyruk beg-ler 'in the west the tarxans, officials, and begs' J S 1; otherwise only a component in P.N.s Inançu: Apa: Yarğan Tarxan I W 2; Apa: Tarxan II S 13; [gap] Taman Tarxan Toñukuk Boyla: Bağa: Tarxan (described as buyruk 'officials') II S 14; the last also in T 6; Işvara: Tamğan Tarxan Oring 4: viii ff. türk originally a N. meaning 'the culminating point of maturity' (of a fruit, human being, etc.), but more often used as an Adj. meaning (of a fruit) 'just fully ripe'; (of a human being) 'in the prime of life, young, and vigorous'. It has been suggested that this word is identical with the ethnonym Türk and really means 'strong' in a general sense. The latest exposition of this theory is in Doerfler II 888, an article of over 11 pages giving a history of the ethnonym and unfortunately containing several errors. The case against the theory, which is based on the facts that the original form of the ethnonym was Türkî and that türk is never used in the generalized sense of 'strong', is in Studies, pp. 84 ff.; see also Clauson, 'The concept of “strength” in Turkish', Nemeth Armağan, pp. 93 ff., Ankara, 1962. Survives there is no cross-reference between 'trees in general' and 'tree' in general, as in NW Kurnyk, where only(?) a young man in the prime of life is 'a young man in the prime of life in those languages'. The reading is very improbable; some other word like tört 'four' is likelier.

D tarım N.S.A. fr. tar-; lit. 'a single act of dispersing'; Hap. leg. as a common N. but familiar as the name of a river. (VU) Uṣmi: is perhaps the pre-Turkish name for it. Xak. xı tarım 'branches (a/dd) of a river which flows into swamps and quicksands'; Tarım the name of a place on the frontier of Uyğur near Kuça: called Tarım (sic); a river flows through it; the river is called by the same name Kaş. I 396: (VU) Usmî: Tarım the name of a large river which flows from the Moslem country to Uyğur and there sinks into the sand I 130.

S (D) terım a royal title or form of address; a l.-w. in Pe., see Doerfer II 1000. In spite of his scepticism, Pelliot's suggestion that this is a crasis of teğrim, q.v., is the most plausible explanation of this word. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. terim component in a feminine P.N. Sivv. 137, 18 (ażgan): Civ. kiz kellürüçü lki terım 'the two ladies who brought the bride' Fam. Arch. 154-5: Xak. xI terım a form of address (vittah) to princes (al-tahâkin) and anyone who is a descendant (min awläd) of Afrâsiyâb, royal ladies (al-xâvatân) and others, great and small; this word is not applied to anyone except the children of Xâkânî kings; if they are grown up (kahurî) altun terım is used in the title of royal ladies (ft laqabîl-misti-l-xâvatân) Kaş. I 396: Çâğ. (?). xv ff. terem (so spelt) a name for great ladies (xevatân-i buzure; (Pe. quotn.) the author of the Farhang-i Cîhângîrî included this word in his dict. with a quoted. See Sar. 192r. 24.

torum 'a camel colt', the next age-group beyond a botun; q.v.; the age indicated varies in different languages. Survives in NE Tuv.
dorum 'a one-year old'; SW Osrm. torun (sic) 'a two-car old'; Tkm. to:rum 'between six months and a year'. See Schcherbâh. p. 106. Xak. xi torum (bi{l}-işâ, 'with back vowels) ibn maxâd 'a camel colt', Feminine tişî: torum Kaş. I 396: xiv Muh. al-fasil 'a camel colt just weaned' torum:torum Mel. 7, 15; Rif. 79; al-hiqq properly 'a three-year old', but the only word for 'colt' under 'camels' torrum: 70, 9; 172: Çâğ. xxv ff. torum 'a two-year old camel colt'; a one-year old is called köşek and köseler and a three-year taylak; and it (taylak) is also a stallion (asb-i zar) which they allow to run with the mares and breed from. San. 175r. 9; a.o. 326v. 18 (köşek): (Kip. xiv (a camel) alladî lahu sanatân 'two years old' torumçax Bul. 7, 5).

D turm (d-) N.S.A. fr. I tur-; lit. 'a single act of standing'. S.i.s.i.m. with various extended meanings, e.g. SW Osrm. Tkm. durum 'position, attitude'. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. turm ara seems to mean 'completely', or 'immediately'; (anger) turm ara (destroys fully matured doctrine and humble thoughts) TT II 17, 70: Bud. (let the king offer incense ... ) ol tütsüngünt tittlini turm ara kâk kalik içinde yađîlî 'the smoke of that incense will immediately pervade the atmosphere and' Suv. 424, 12-14; a.o. 425, 21: Xak. xi turm qadr gâmatî-l-ractul 'the height of a man standing upright'; hence one says bir er turum: suv 'water (etc.) the depth of the height of a man' Kaş. I 396: (xiv Muh. (under 'weavers') implements) silsilatu-l-ğazi 'the length(?) of thread' (PU) turm: Mel. 60, 7; Rif. 159 may belong here.

turmâ: Preliminary note. This word occurs in Uyğ. in contexts which suggest that it means 'an offering', prob. of food. In this sense it seems to be an Intrans. Dev. N. fr. I tur- in the sense of something which is set before a god. Elsewhere it means 'radish' both in Turkish and Pe. and other languages, see Doerfer II 897. It survives in one or two NW languages; elsewhere it has been displaced by Pe. turp. Doerfer is prob. right in suggesting that, in view of the resemblance between the two words and the impossibility of finding a Turkish etymology for the word in this sense, it is a l.-w.

D I turmâ: Dev. N. fr. I tur-; lit. 'standing'; 'an offering'. N.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. TT VII 16 is a fragment of a text prescribing the offerings to be made to various divine personages. Ll. 7-16 listing the offerings to be made to the planets is headed aşlari erser 'as for their foods'; these offerings are vegetables and dairy products. Ll. 17 ff. listing similar offerings to be made to the yâkşas is headed yâkşaların turmaları erser; (and after preaching this sûtra) yavğan turmâ [gap] egsûgîzî? yêtûrgîl 'offering plain offerings without stint(?)' (to the four divine mahârâjâs—i.e. the yâkşas) Suvv. 26, 19-20; tört maharac teğîrlerke turmâ ötüineyin 'I will offer offerings to the four divine mahârâjâs do. 27, 12-13.'

?F 2 turmâ: 'radish'. Xak. xi turmâ: al-fuel (MS. fićî) 'radish'; hence al-cazar 'carrot' is called sarîg turmâ: that is 'yellow radish', and the people of Ar grieving: call it gözerî taken fr. the Pe. word for 'carrot', gazar, substituting front vowels (rahkâhîhu); the Oğuz call it (VU) geşûr, also taken from the Persians; when they mingled with the Persians they forgot some of their language and used Persian instead (various examples follow) Kaş. I 431; a.o. I 366 (kuvîl): Kip. xii al-fuel (açi: (PU) erege; also called) turmâ: Hou. 8, 13: (xiv turp (with -p') al-fuel Id. 38).

D tarmut Hap. leg. but see tarmutîğ, tarmutla:n-; Active Dev. N. fr. tarmat—with -a:- elided; lit. 'something which branches out'. Xak. xi tarmut fiecâl-l-cabal te-a tâl'd'uhu 'ravines and stream-beds in the mountains'; hence one says tağı tarmat keçtîm 'I crossed ravines and stream-beds in the mountains' Kaş. I 451.

D tarmak Conc. N. fr. tarmat— as that V. is a Den. V. fr. tarmat the basic meaning must be 'something which branches out in several directions', but, perhaps because of its resemblance to turjak, it sometimes means 'claw', instead of 'a set of claws, a talon' which would etymologically be more correct. Survives in NE Sor tarbak 'leather glove'; Tel. tarmak VUF tayğun/toygun n.o.a.b.; presumably some kind of high official. The first syllable is prob. Chinese tay 'great' (Giles 10,573); Vllh. Thomsen in Inscriptions de l'Orkhan déchiffres, Helsingfors, 1896, p. 177, note 84 suggested that the second syllable was the Collective Suff. -gun but this seems improbable. It is more likely to be a Chinese word, but there are phonetic objections to the suggestion that it is luan 'official' (Giles 6,341). The two words may be different, the second vowel in the second is uncertain. ka: Preliminary note. Von G. was no doubt right in suggesting in "TT X", p. 47 that ka: in the phr. ka: kadaş is a l.-wc. fr. Chinese chia 'family' (Pulleyblank, Middle Chinese ka; Giles 1,139). Kaş's etymology of kadaş is therefore demonstrably strong, and the question arises whether the word ka: 'vessel' was not invented to justify this false etymology. Kaş is the only authority for the word, and it seems likely that if it really existed it, too, was a Chinese l.-wc., but there is no obvious origin for it.

F lá ka: 'family'; see above. Found only in the phr. ka: kadaş, which is n.o.a.b. The evolution of this phr. into kab kadaş, also n.o.a.b., is odd and perhaps due to the false etymology mentioned above. It should be noted that both elements in the phr. are declined separately. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. ka kadaş 'family, kinsmen' is common, e.g. ka kadaş oğul kız ed tavar 'family, kinsmen, sons and daughters, movable property, and livestock' U III 6, 2 (i); kamin kadaşının do. 36, 35; kası kadaşı Surv. 5, 7; a.o.o.: Civ. ka kadaşka tartınçığı bolur 'he becomes closely attached to his family and kinsmen' TT VII 37, 13 (note ka: not declined); in the provisions in commercial documents prohibiting relatives from objecting to an agreement one typical list is eşcum inim kam kadaşım 'my elder and younger brothers, my family and relations' UsP. 107, 11; 108, 11; 110, 9-10: Xak. xi KB (a man must associate) kab (sic in MSS.) kadaşlar bile 3209; a.o. 3213; xiiii (?) Tef. kab kadaşımı (sic) 'my family and kinsmen'; kabı kadaşını 198: Xvar. xiv kab kadaşım Qutb 126.

?F 2 ka: 'vessel, container'; see above. N.o.a.b. Cf. kab. Xak. xi ka: al-zarf va'lı' te'i'd 'a vessel or container' but used only for vessels containing liquids; hence one says ka: kaça: zarf va'lı' te'i'd as a Hend. Kaş. III 211 (followed by a para. on -ka: as the Dat. Suff.). (under tüdes) hence (i.e. by using the Suff. -des) one says kadaş for 'brother, kinsman' (li'l-ax va'lı'-qarib); the base is ka: and -daş is attached to it, the meaning is that both relatives come from the same vessel (zarf) that is their mother's womb I 407; a.o. III 238 (kaça:).

ki: Exclamation; Atalay in Kaş. III 212, note says that it is still used in Anatolia. Xak. xi ki: exclamation (harful-l-mid); hence one says ki: berbi: kel 'hi! come here'; pronounced with a very long vowel (?; yawmad hayyâl-qâf wa'l-carr) Kaş. III 212 (followed by a para. on -kt: as an affectionate Suff. attached to terms of relationship, e.g. atakı: yâ 'my dear father').

PU?F kiftu: 'scissors'; discussed at length in Doerfer I 318; prob. a l.-w., but as Doerfer points out, no plausible Chinese origin has been suggested. Survives as kipti and the like in most NE and some NW languages, Yakut kipthi, Pek. 1403. Most other languages for 'scissors' have (the Mong. l.-w.) kuyus. Both these words are l.-w.s in various foreign languages, sec. Doerfer. kabak/kapak Preliminary note. Morphologically kabak Dim. f. of kalb, and kapak Dev. N. fr. 2 *kap- are quite different words. They are still distinguished phonetically in SW Az. (gabaq/gapaq) and Osm. (kapak/kapak) but in early texts they are spelt and, in some modern languages, pronounced exactly the same, and it is not always easy to determine which word is intended. Exceptionally, in SW Tkm. 'pumpkin' is sometimes kabak, but gabaq means 'eyelid' and Şapaq 'cover, lid'.

D kabak Dim. f. of kalb; lit. 'a small container', in practice 'gourd, pumpkin, marrow', and the like (but not 'sweet melon'). S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE(?) w. some phonetic changes. L.-w. in Pe., etc., Döerfer III 1419. Xak. xı kabak al-dubba' wahtuva'l-qar 'a pumpkin', that is a gourd which is eaten fresh (ratb) Kagröße I 382 (between two translations of kapak): Çag. XV ff. kabag/kabak ('with -b-') (1) kadi 'gourd'; (2) metaphor 'a target' (nişāna-nenm) which they fasten on the top of a tall pole and shoot at (quotns.); originally in shooting competitions they put a pumpkin on the top of a tall pole and so the word came to be used for 'target' San. 263v. 14: Kom. XIV 'pumpkin' kabak CCF; Gr.: Kip. XIX al-qar 'waşqa' (marrow) 'gabak' Hou. 8, 11: XIV kabak 'a pumpkin at which they shoot arrows' Id. 68: XIV al-qar 'gabak' Kav. 93, 13: Tuh. 20a. 3: Osm. D kapak Dev. N. fr. 2 *kap- lit. 'something which covers or closes', usually used for 'a lid, or other cover', and 'eyelid'. S.i.a.m.l.g. w.
some phonetic changes. L.-w. in Pe., etc., Doerfer III 1367, 1545. Türki viii ff. Man. İ Kapı̇g. Conc. N. in -ı̇r fr. 2 *kap-' 'door, gate'. The second vowel was originally -ı̇- but became -a- in Man.-A and some Uyg. (Uyg.-A) texts and later became -u- by labial attraction. Survives in some NW languages and SW Az., Osm., Tkm.; elsewhere displaced by eşikan. L.-w. in Pe., etc. as kabak, etc., Doerfer III 1368. Türki viii temir KapI ş 'the Iron Gate', a pass between Balkh and Samarkand is mentioned several times in I, II, T, fx.: viii ff. Man. tamu kapçına 'to the gate of hell' Chus. 126; kapçağ açtu 'he opened its gate' M I 13, 7; o.o. do. 8-12; M III 23, 2 (ii); TT II 8, 65: Uyg. viii ff. Bud. kapâq (sic) 'gate' is common in PP. Kaz. 59, 10: KapI ş (-b-) Tuh. 8a. 5.

Kavîk 'bran'; m.o.a.b. Cf. kepêk; the existence of two similar words with this meaning suggests that they may have a common foreign origin. Uyg. vii ff. Civ. kavîk klîp a klîkîke sûrtser alâsî kêtê 'if one makes bran and rubs it on a man with a blotchy skin, his blotches disappear' TT VII 23, 4-5: Xak. xi kavîk 'bran' (al-muxâ'ala) of millet; Kas. (D) kôvâk morphologically Pass. Dev. N. fr. *kâv- 'the bladder' (of a man or animal). S.i.m.i.m. w. considerable phonetic changes; some modern forms are liable to be confused with those of kovak. The alternative form kâgûk in Uyg. Civ. may be the original form. Uyg. vii ff. Civ. (the 14th letter is called irinâ(-))): kavûk üze urûq ol 'one must place it over the bladder' TT VII 41, 3; kâgûk sîzlaqma em 'a cure for an ache in the bladder' H I 165; a.o. do. 37 (tisli): Xak. xî kavak al-matûna 'the bladder' Kas. TTS I 435; II 902; III 424; IV 484: xiv (after Çağ.) in Rûmî kavak has the same meaning and also means a kind of turban San. 279v. 8.

E kuvak read by Radloff in several documents in UsP., and translated 'assessment' is an error for kuvraq.

(D) kovak 'hollow, empty'; cognate to kôvâk, q.v.; survives only (?) in SW Osm. kovak, but the syn. words Az. gövûs/kokûs and Tkm. govalq, gozûs are cognate. Xak. xî kovak neq 'anything hollow' (acowf) Kas. I 383; kovuk ditto; alternative form (lûgâ) of kovak III 164; xii (?) D kabarçak; etc.; words of this general form are recorded in forms and with meanings so various that it is at first sight doubtful whether they can all be traced back to a single origin. If they can it must be a Dev. N. fr. kabar- and should mean etymologically 'blister, pustule', and the like. Such a word could be used metaphor. for 'the carapace' of a tortoise, and perhaps even for 'box'; but it is hard to see how it could have come to mean 'puppet, doll'. The modern words NE Alt. kabircik; Bar. kabirdzak; Tel. kabirçak R II 451; NC Kir. kabirçik; Kzx. kabirçak all meaning 'fish-scale; mollusc shell; a thin layer (of ice on water, of skin on milk)' seem to be survivals of such a word, but show the unusual sound change -a- > -i- in the second syllable; how old the change is is uncertain, the vowel points in the MS. of Kaş. look like later additions. The situation is complicated by the fact that Mongolia kobogor 'hollowed out', hence 'container, case, quiver' (the change in meaning may have arisen from confusion with kobra/kobo, the Mong. form of kovga, q.v.)
became a l.-w. in Çağ, or Osm. as kobur/kubur San. 282r. 22 and Pe., Doerfer I 268, and forms like koburçuk are prob. Dim. f.s of this l.-w. kat Preliminary note. Apart from 1 kat and 2 kat below kat has also been read as the name of the mythological monster in Xwar. XIII(?) Oğ. 22 ff. This is certainly an error. Sinor has pointed out that these scriptions are attempts to represent one or other of two Sanskrit words gandā and khadga or Prakrit forms of them, all meaning 'rhinozeros'. Khadga (prob. in a 'Tokharian form') appears in U III 74, 7 as ktkl and also in the Chin.-Uyğ. 2 kat (ka'd) a generic term for 'berry'; survives in some NE languages R II 275 and kut originally in a rather mystical sense 'the favour of heaven', hence, less specifically 'good fortune' and the like, and hence, more generally, 'happiness'. In KB, where it is regarded as syn. w. Ar. darela, it came to mean, more neutrally, 'fortune', either good or bad. S.i.a.m.i.g., usually for 'good fortune, happiness', and the like, but in one or two languages, esp. in NE, it seems rather to mean 'soul, life force'. More or less syn. w. Kyv., q.v. F xatun ‘lady’ and the like. Although attempts have been made to connect this word etymologically with xağan/xan there is no reasonable doubt that it is taken fr. Sogdian xwatîn (xwatîn); in Sogdian xwatî means ‘lord, ruler’ and xatîn ‘the wife of the lord, ruler’, which is precisely the meaning of xatun in the early period. This should normally be transcribed xatun, although in Kaş. the spelling is kastun in Turkish and xatun in Arabic. Survives in NE Tuv. kaday; SE Tûrti xatun/xotum; NC, NW katin; SC Uzb. xotin; SW Az. gadin, Osrn. kadin meaning only ‘married woman, wife’, with a slightly honorific flavour. ka’dir ‘grim, brutal, oppressive, dangerous’, and the like. The close phonetic and semantic resemblance to Ar. qâdir to which Kaş. calls attention has caused some confusion and it is consistently spelt kadîr in the MS. of Kaş. but correctly as ka’dir in KB. Survives as kazîr in several NE languages R II 379; Khak. xazîr; Tuv. ka’dir. See ka’dir Preliminary note. D kadı (ka’dı:ak) Conc. N. in -k fr. kadıra-. Den. V. fr. ka’dır, see kadır-; lit. ‘something hard, rough’, and the like. Survives as kayır ‘whetstone’ in NC Kir., Kz.: SC Uzb. (kayırak) and several NW languages (cf. billeğ:). In NC Kir. it also means ‘hard, unirrigated land’, and in SW Osm. ‘shifting sandy soil’, which seems a further development of this concept, but in Osm. it now more often means ‘slippery ground’, perhaps owing to some confusion with 2 ka’dır-.

The translation in Ka’s. is perhaps influenced by a supposed etymological connection with 1 kad., L.-w. in Pe. and Mong., Doerfer III 1599. Xak. xi ka’dır (MS, kadırak) ma’düf’ül-cibâl wa mahunihi:a ‘folds and contortions in the mountains’; hence one says kat kadırak (kadırak) ditto Ka’s. I 471; a.o. I 320 (1 kad): Çağ. viii ff. kayırak sang-i fasdn ‘whetstone’, also called bilee Sun. 281 v. 3.

(D) ku’dırak ‘the tail of an animal’; morphologically Pass. Dev. N. fr. *ku’dır-, cf. ku’dırak, ku’dırqun; the origin of Mong. kudırqa ‘crupper’ (Haemisch 70, Kom. 919). S.i.a.m.l.g., usually as ku’dırak. Türkül viii ff. tiğ at ku’dırkun ‘the roan horse’s tail’ IrkB 50; a.o.(?) in a corrupt prob. in do. 16: Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (in a list of constellations) irbiş ku’dırak ‘the panther’s tail’ TT VI 93; Xak. xi ku’dırak (MS, in the main entry ku’dırak, elsewhere usually ku’dırak) a generic term for ‘the tails’ (a’dâb) of all kinds of animals; one says koy ku’dırak: ‘a sheep’s fat tail’ (a’lya); at ku’dırak: ‘horse’s tail’ (dânh) (verse); kuş ku’dırak: ‘bird’s tail’ (prov.): ku’dırak used metaph. (yuknî bihi) for ‘anus’ (al-faqha), so one says ku’dırak: ötgen (unvocalized) kîş: işnâ niblecî- (first two letters undotted, Atalay’s emendation) faqha ‘a man who is constantly breaking wind’ Ka’s. I 472; o.o. I 513 (sabit-); III 164 (swyik); 256 (sabu:), etc.: KB balık ku’dırak (of the (constellation) Pisces) 66: xiii(?) Dis. V. İDR-

VUD katar- pcc. to Kâş. and described as the Turkish (i.e. Xak.) equivalent of katar-, q.v.; prima facie a casis of *ka’dur- Caus. f. of 2 *ka’d- or 2 ka’dit-, but the second -a- is a difficulty, perhaps a scribal error for -u- caused by a false analogy w. katar-; see katar- and katrun-. Xak. xi o1 anî katard: raddâ-‘xayl wa sarafahâ ‘an wahîhî ‘he turned the horse back and prevented it from going in the direction in which it was going”; similarly one says (ob) yağı: katard: ‘he turned the enemy (etc.) back’ Ka’s. II 74 (verse; katarur, katarmał); a.o. III 193 (katar-); katarâgan I 517, 16 (see katar-).

D kadı- ‘to twist back, turn back (Trans)’, and the like; presumably Caus. f. of 2 *ka’d-; S.i.a.m.l.g. as kayîr- and the like, except SW where kayır- is a Sec. f. of kadıgur-. Xak. xi ol anî boycott katârdü: ‘he twisted (lawwâd) his (neck)’ (etc.); and one says ol anî söniz katârdü: ‘he contradicted (or refuted, radda) his statement’ Ka’s. II 76 (ka’dîrâr, ka’dîrma:); a.o. I 370, 22; 508, 2; II 74, 13; 164, 14 and I 144, 9, where the text is in some disorder: KB söniz ka’dra kördüm ‘I tried to contradict (or refute) his statement’ 6244: xiii(?) Tef. kadıgur/kayır Ger. used as an Adv. (to turn, send, come) ‘back, backwards’ 102v-4: Xwar. xiv kayır Adv. (of movement) ‘backwards’; (of time) ‘again, afresh’ 128: Kom. xiv ‘to take back’ kayır/kayır/kayrîr al- CCI; Gr.

D katar- Caus. f. of 2 kat- ‘to harden’, lit. or metaph. S.i.a.m.l.g., not NE or SW. Xak. xi ol yumuşak néngi: katurdu: ‘he hardened (galla) the soft thing’; as soft iron is annealed (yudakkar); and one says ta’s yér anu: katurdu: ‘foreign countries (i.e. travel abroad) hardened him', that is made him experienced (mucras muhabhak) Kaş. II 74 (katurur, kuturmak); (katurgan in I 516 is an error for katgurgan).

D kattur- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 kat-; cf. kartur-. Xak. xi ol yrp katturdi: 'he ordered that the thread should be twisted (bi-falt'li-xayt) into the needle'; and one says ol talka:nka: ya:y katturdi: 'he had the parched grain mixed (adada) with oil'; also used of any two things when they are mixed (xutili) Kaş. II 189 (katturur, kuturmak).

D kutur- See kurtgar-.

VU kodur- (MS. kodur-, but between ka-dur and ke'dur-?) Hap. leg.; morphologically obscure. Xak. xi ol bu: rsk: kodurdi: 'he took great trouble (cadda) over this affair and made strenuous efforts over it' (baba:na fihi) Kaş. II 76 (kodurur, kodurnak); the word may also occur in I 144, 7 but is not translated there.

*karur- See ku'dur, etc.

VUD 1 kutur- 'to pour out, empty', and the like; prima facie a crisis of *kudur- Caus. f. of kudr-; it is, however, odd that it survives as kudur-; with the same meaning in NW Kk., Anat. poured of its contents' 'he emptied (farraga) the vessel of its contents' II 164, 16; Kuturmix ka:b 'an empty (masfrag) vessel' II 170, 6: KB sevinçin topuk tut sakınçin kutur 'keep his joy full and pour away his anxiety' 117; a.o. 1455: Kom. xiv 'to pour out, empty' xotar- CCG; Gr.: Kip. xiii garafa 'to dish up' (VU) xotur- Hou. 34, 5; xiv afraga (VU) xotar- (the vocalization is chaotic and partly lacking, but this seems the likeliest) Bul. 292: xv garafa'li-t'um (VU) xotar- Kav. 74, 17; Tuh. 27a. 1: Osm. xiv to xvi (VU) xotur- (1) 'to empty'; (2) 'to dish up'; in several texts TTS I 487; III 479; IV 543.

(D) 2 kutur- 'to be excessive, exceed reasonable limits' in various applications. Morphologically obscure but cognate to kudurz, S.i.a.m.l.g. usually 'to rave, be mad', and the like. Cf. Doerfler III 1439. Uyğ. vii ff. Man. ovke nizvan lüz xoturman 'suffering from the passion of anger to excess' TT III 29-30: Xak. oğlan kuturdi: 'the boy was light-hearted and persisted in his wantonness' (irtaha ... wa laca fi mucünimi); and one says tarz xoturdi: 'the crop, vegetation, etc. thrived' (zakd), originally (it meant that) something 'exceeded its due measure' (cawaza 'an miqdårhi) Kaş. II 74 (Aor. omitted, kuturmak); Xoturma: là to'du tavrak 'do not behave outrageously' I 508, 3: XIV Muh. (? ) batran 'pert, overbearing', and the like Kuturmıs Rf. 149 (only): Çağ. xv ff. kutur- (spelt, 'with -u-') divwina şudan 'to be mad'

Sañ. 282r. 27 (quoton.); kudur- ('with -u-') same as kutur- 284r. 3 (quoton.): Kom. xiv 'to be overbearing' kutur- CCG; Gr.: Kip. xiii al-kalab 'hydrophobia, rabies' kuturmak Hou. 33, 4.

D ka'dirt- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of ka'dir-; Xak. xii ol anğ boyın ka'dirî: 'aita 'umugahu 'he had his neck twisted' Kaş. III 431 (ka'dirur, ka'dirmakt).

D kattar- (?kattar-) Hap. leg.; vocalized as below; Caus. f. of ka'tar- which was perhaps really kattar-. Xak. xii ol atîq ka'tarit: 'he ordered that the horse should be turned back' (bi-radd) Kaş. III 430 (ka'tturur, ka'tturma: etc.).

D ka'dril- Pass. f. of ka'dir-; 'to twist' (Intrans.); to be twisted (Pass.)'. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as ka'yr-1-1 kayrıl-, Xak. xii anğ boyını: (mis-spelt bo'yümı) ka'drül: 'his neck twisted' (illetai), also used when it is twisted by someone else (alwahë gayruh); Intrans. and Pass. (yata adda wa l yata adda) Kaş. II 235 (ka'drlur, ka'drimalak); Kip. xv la'aw kayrîl- (and mayr-) Tuh. 32a. 12.

VUD 1 kutur- Hap. leg.; Pass. f. of 1 kutur-. Xak. xii suv olmadun (MS. alma: din) kutruldi: 'the water (or any other liquid) was poured (ufraga) from the jar' Kaş. II 234 (kuturulur, kuturmak).

S 2 kutur- See kerul-.

D kadran- Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of *ka'dar-, which S.i.a.m.l.g. except SW as kayra- kayra- 'to be mad, sharpen' and, less often, 'to gnash the teeth'. See kadırk. Xak. xii ñapar ka'drandi: 'the word was furious (harida) with him and his conduct and dealings with him were harsh' (asura) Kaş. II 249 (ka'dranur, ka'dranmak); these two with -d-; a.o. II 267 (ka'dırlan-).

D katrun- Refl. f. of ka'tar-, lit. 'to turn oneself back'. The form suggests that the basic V. must have been ka'tur- or ka'tur-; n.o.a.b. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (when he saw the demons King Caştan) yüreklin katrunup (assumed the form of the chief of the warriors) U IV 8, 15; Í. G. translated 'steeling his heart', implying a Refl. f. of ka'tur-; this may be right, though the word would be Hap. leg., but the narrative implies some sort of change and 'changing one's mind' seems likelier: Xak. xii köller er kadrunü: 'the laughing man stopped himself' (laughing; imtana:); its origin is changing one's mind about something (al-harran fi'l-arn); hence one says ol maşa: yarmak: berür erken kadrunü: 'he was giving me money (etc.) and then changed his mind and refrained' (harina wa'mtana'm minhu) Kaş. II 249 (katrunur, katrunmak).

(E) kuturar- Atalay lists this as a Xak. word, but in fact Kaş. II 199, 21 ff. says that 'to save' might perhaps logically be kuturar- but is in fact kutgar- (kurtgar-) because kutur-, particular in the Aor. katıran wouldn have had too many ṭs in it.

D kaṭrīs- Recip./Co-op. f. of kaṭir-; both forms Hap. leg. Xak. xi ol menē bīrē: boyyun kaṭrīsē: 'he competed with me in twisting (ji ḫay) necks' (etc.) and one says ol ikkī: sūz kaṭrīsē: 'they two contradicted (or refuted, ṛaddu) one another's statements' Kaṣ. II 218 (verse; no ḽor. or Infin.); olār ikkī: boyyun kaṭrīsē: 'they two competed in twisting necks' (etc.) III 194 (kaṭrīsē, kaṭrīsēmāk).

VUD 1 kutruṣ- Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of 1 kutur-. Xak. xi ol maṛa: kaḥ kutruṣē: 'he helped me to empty (ji ḫaṛ) the vessel' (etc.) Kaṣ. II 218 (kutruṣē, kutruṣmāk).

D 2 kutruṣ- Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of 2 kutur-. Xak. xi oḷgaṃ kutruṣē: 'the boys played and enjoyed themselves in a big (a bi ḫa ḫo) house' (etc.) Kaṣ. II 218 (kutruṣē, kutruṣmāk).

VUD koḍuru: Ger. of koḍur- used as an Adv. qualifying V.s and less often Adj.s. properly 'energetically, vigorously' and, more vaguely, 'extremely'. Pec. to Uyğ. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. munça koḍuru inmekläy tu 'lamenting so vigorously' U III 35, 27; a.o. 22, 17; koḍuru tlaŋ 'listen attentively' TT VI 383; Kuān. 176; koḍuru tlaŋnç 'to listen attentively' are extremely marvellous' Swv. 348, 3; o.o. U II 7, 6 etc. (kołula-).

VUD kodurçuk Hap. leg.; Dev. or Den. (?) N. origin obscure; al-kayd is normally an A.N. meaning 'cunning, deceit'; and the like, but must here be a Conc. N. meaning 'doll'. Cf. kabarçak. Xak. xi koḍurçuk 'a doll' (al-kayd), that is models in the shape of people (tamāṭil alā širati-l-nās) which girls make to play with Kaṣ. I 501.

PUD kuḍurçak Hap. leg.; this word appears in a section headed fa'ul al of words containing five consonants of which one is -w- or -y-, e.g. buʃayuk, sarkayuk but is spelt kuḍurçak or kuṭrīsē; the meaning suggests that it is a Dev. N. fr. koḍur-, and the text perhaps originally had kuyurçak. Xak. xi kuḍurçak(?) al-'uṣuṣ 'the tail-bone, coccyx' Kaṣ. III 179.

D kaḍrīgāk Hap. leg.; Dev. N. (notting repeated action) fr. kaṭir-, lit. 'something constantly twisted, or wrinkled'. Xak. xi kaḍrīgāk maʃul'yl-yaʃal'-'amal 'a blister on the hand caused by manual labour' Kaṣ. I 502.

D kuḍurçak Pec. to Kaṣ.; Dev. N. fr. kuḍur-. Xak. xi kuḍurçak aḥad zaylayi'l-ğabā xaʃa(n) 'one of the two skirts of a robe at the back' Kaṣ. I 502; a.o. I 17, 3.

PUD kaḍrīgān perhaps Dev. N. (notting repeated action); since both in the Brahmi texts and Uyğ. script the same letter is used for t and d it is uncertain whether it is derived fr. katir- or kaṭir-, both of which are semantically possible. N.o.a.b. Türkü vii see kaṭir: Uyğ. viii ff. Bud.Sanskrit koṭātākī a kind of tree, Trichosanthes dioeca TT VIII A.39 (spelt kūṭrīgān): xiv Chin.-Uyğ. Pu katturğan See kakurğan.

D kaṭrīgān Hap. leg.; P.N.A. fr. kaṭir. Xak. xi kaṭrīgā er 'a man who owns mules' (baqā) Kaṣ. I 494.

D kuturma: Hap. leg.; Pass. Dev. N. presumably fr. 2 kutur-; the cap in question may be that worn by high Uyğ. dignitaries with vertical peaks described by v. G. in 'Die Dreizack-Kappe uigurischer Würdenträger', UAJ 36 (1964), p. 331. Xak. xi kuturma: bārēk 'a cap which has two peaks (or flaps, canāhā, lit. 'wings') in front and behind' Kaṣ. I 490.

D kaḍrālān- Refl. Den. V. fr. kaḍrār-; survives in NE Sag., Sīr, Tel. kazārlan- 'to rage, to be angry' R II 380. (Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. this word has been misread for kaṭuğlan- in U II 46, 58, see kit-): Xak. xi er kaḍrālān: 'the man pretended that he had a harsh nature' (asura taḥubuhi); its origin is kaḍrāndu: (mis-spelt kaḍrindu;) and this is more correct (aṣāḥh) Kaṣ. D katış- Co-op. f. of 1 kat; s.ia.m.l.g. except SE(?) with some extended meanings. Xak. xi ol menli birle: talkanka: yaq katışteden: translated 'he helped me to mix (fi cadh) oil with the parched grain'; also used for competing Kaş. F xağan a title of great antiquity taken over by the Türki in the specific sense of ‘an independent ruler of a tribe or people’. Its earlier discussion is covered by Pulleyblank in Asia

Major IX, Part 2, pp. 260 ff. It is first noted in an immediately recognizable form as a royal title of the Juan-juan and T’u-yü-hun round about A.D. 400, but Pulleyblank believes that a Hsiung-nu royal title hu-yü (Ancient Chinese ywaq-ywody) mentioned in connection with events at the end of the 1st century B.C. is an earlier Chinese transcription of the same word.

In Türkü and Uyg. texts it is habitually transcribed as xağan, but as both x- and k-would have been represented by the same letter in these texts it was almost certainly xağan.

The relationship between it and xan, which is practically syn. w. it, is obscure; the two cannot morphologically be connected in Turkish but may have been alternative forms in the languages from which they passed to Turkish. It became an early 1.-w. in Mong.

as kağan/ka’an (Haenisch 54–6) and re-entered

 Çağ. in the latter form. It was Arabicized as xağan at an early date and in that form reed one of the imperial titles until the dissolution of the Ottoman Empire. Türkü

viii xağan is very common; it is normally used of the Türkü ruler himself, but also of the Emperor of China, tavğaq xağan I N 12, the King of Tibet Tûpût xağan I N 12, and junior members of the royal family installed as koğuş Preliminary note. Prima facie this word is a Dev. N. in -üş, but there is no trace of *koğû-, and even if this was taken to be an alternative form of kov- there is no semantic connection. Equally it seems impossible to find a common basis for the two meanings of the word.

F kamağ (yxamağ) 'all'; an early l-w. fr. Middle Persian hâm (hamag). The earliest indisputable evidence for initial k- is in the Man. Syriac script, the Runic and Uyğ. letters used might equally well represent x-, but there is no indisputable occurrence of x- in the Man. Syriac and Uyğ. scripts the word is usually spelt in the Iranian form khm or kmağ; the form kamağ with labial vowel attraction does, however, occur as early as Tûrki vii ff. Survives as kamûrk/xamûk in several NE languages and kamû in SW Osm. Cf. barça: etc. Tûrki vii kara: kamağ boðun 'all the common people' I E 8, II E 8; kamağ: yetî: yîz er bolmiş 'they became 700 men in all' I E 12, II E 11; a.o. D konak (konuk) Preliminary note. There is no reasonable doubt that etymologically the words meaning 'millet' and 'guest' and the like are identical, both representing an Intrans./Pass. Dev. N. fr. kon-, in the first case in the sense of 'something planted in the ground'. Both became early l.-u.s in Mong. as konak (konoğ) (Haenisch 66, Kow. 868), and survive in the same forms in modern languages, but it is more convenient to list them separately.

D 1 konak (konok) some sort of cereal, originally 'millet', of which there are several kinds, but now sometimes used for other sorts. The normal Ar. word for 'millet' is al-duwān (see āyūr, tarīq), al-cāwars is a l.-w. fr. Persian gāncares, also 'millet', perhaps of a different kind. Survive in NE Tur. konak 'Timothy grass'; SE Túrki konak 'maize'; NC Kir. konok 'Italian millet' (in some places 'maize; sorghum'); SC Uzb. kūnok ditto; NW Kk. konak 'a particular kind of millet'. Kir Preliminary note. There are two common words of this form meaning respectively 'high ground' and the like, SW Tkm. gîr, and 'grey', Tkm. gîr. Kaş. gives two other meanings which can hardly be connected with either word. In a number of modern languages kir also means 'edge', see R II 733, but this may be an extension of the first meaning.

1 kir originally 'an isolated mountain or block of mountains'; in this sense and generally for 'high ground' s.a.m.l.g., but in some languages, including NW Nog., SW Osm. it hardly means more than 'plain, steppe, wilderness' without any connotation of height. ?D kûrmâ: 'pillaging; theft'; etymologically connected with 2 kûrâkt; not connected with SW Osm. kûrmâ in the phr. kûrmâ karišik 'muddled, confused' which is a Dev. N./A. fr. 1 kûrâ-; n.o.a.b. Xak. xi kûrmâ: al-nabûh 'pillaging; theft'; hence one says <ol> neq kûrmalâ:di: 'he stole (nâhadî) the thing' Kaş. I 433; kağûn kûrmâ: bolsa: 'if a melon has been stolen' (muhiba) I 410, 11.

D kûrmâ: Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kûr-; lit. 'scraped' i.e. to a particular shape. In Ar. xarâtau means 'to turn (on a lathe)' and maxürûf normally 'conical', but with 'ball' it must mean 'spherical'. Survives in SW Az. çûrmâ 'pellet, shot'; Osm. kûrmâ 'pleat, fold, crease; broken'. Xak. xi kûrmâ: al-maxürûf 'turned on a lathe' of anything; hence one says kûrmâ: tobûk kura maxürüf 'a spherical ball' Kaş. I 433.

F kûrmâ: 'bow-case'; there is an apparent etymological connection with kûruñûk, same but the word itself, which is only in Ar., seems to be a corruption of Pe. qarbûn, and that word, though not so far traced in Ar. with this meaning, seems to be derived fr. qaraba, which inter alia means 'to put (something) in a sheath or case'. The word seems therefore to be by origin Ar., or at any r e Pe.-Ar., and of one of such words in Oğuz (see 2 turma-), and the connection with kûruñûk illusory. The long note on the word in P. Pelliot, Notes sur l'histoire de la Horde d'Or, Paris, 1950, p. 42, must be corrected accordingly. See also the discussion of Pc. gurbûn in Dörfener III 1451. N.o.a.b. Oğuz/Kip. xi kûrmal: al-nabûh, 'bow case'; one says kês kûrmal: 'quiver and bow case'; its origin is fr. kûrmâ: (sic; error for kûrmâ:k) addu'll-mîn'aqa fi'l-wasâsî 'to fasten a belt round the waist' Kaş. I 444; a.o. III 16 (yasîk): (Xwar. xûn kûrûm 'bow-case' Quth 141): Kûp. xv tirkâs (Pe. l.-w.) 'quiver' (sic) kûrmal Tuh. 8b. 11.

kuy Preliminary note. Kuy 'the women's apartments, the private part of a dwelling', a l.-te. fr. Chinese kuei, same meaning (Giles 6,440; Middle Chinese kuei) is very common in O. Kir. and occurs in Türkü viii ff. Yen. It is also prob. that it reappears in Uyg. as kuy, but Müller transcribed this as kün, and was perhaps right, see 2 kün. It is possible that, with their different social arrangements, the Turks took this l.-w. as meaning merely 'a secluded spot' and that 2 kuy below is the same word.

F I kuy 'the women's apartments', Chinese l.-w., see above. Occurs only in the Loc. in the stock phr. below. Türkü viii ff. Yen. VUD kuyg Dev. N./A. fr. kay- (2*kaḍ-); the existence of this word is doubtful; in the entry in Kaş. the qaf carries a fatha and the ya' is unvoiced, but this entry follows koyuğ and the normal order of words with the same consonants in Kaş. is the usual one, fatha, damma, kasra; in this position therefore kuyg, a Sec. f. of kiḍg, would be expected, and the resemblance between the translations of this word and kuyik in Kaş. makes this all the more probable. The word in Vel., if correctly translated, is more likely to be a Pass. Dev. N./A., but San. does not mention this meaning and lists only kayuk (kayguk), and it is very prob. that Vel.'s is a mistranslation. Xak. xı kuyg (?kuyg) ydr: al-maḍṭ̠i'ul' -mumharaʃa 'ani l-cadda wa qa'yirihi 'a place at an angle from the (main) road, etc.' Kaş. D kiyik (*ktd̠uk) Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kiy-; 'crooked, cut on a slant', and the like. Easily confused with kuyg (ktd̠ug) in some modern languages. NE Tel. kuyg 'anger' R II 716; Khak. xiyix 'injury, insult' may belong here; the word certainly survives in SW Os'm. kiyik 'minced, chopped up' (the translation 'fainting fit' in R II 716 is not confirmed elsewhere); Tkm. giyik 'crooked'. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. kīmnî̠ közin ağı̠zn yel tartup kiyik kîmî̠ ş erser 'if a man’s eyes or mouth are made crooked by demonic possession' (i.e. a paralytic stroke) H I 124: Xak. xı 'a breach of promise' (sulf'ul'li'ld) is called kiyik; and it is used as an Adj. Preliminary note. As pointed out in Studies, pp. 131, etc. there is good evidence that, although in Türkî there was only one, unvoiced, Postpalatal initial, and the position was prob. the same in Uyğ. and Xak., in an earlier stage of the language both voiced and unvoiced Postpalatal initials existed. Where such evidence exists regarding a particular word, (¬) is added after the heading.

D ke\'dîn (g-) Den. In the geographical usage sometimes treated as a N. and given Suffs. In the medieval period sometimes spelt ke\'dîn, this was etymologically an error, but may have been a popular pronunciation which led to the evolution ke\'dîn > ke\'yn > ke\'yn; the final form may have been more than a mis-spelling or mispronunciation of ke\'n, q.v. kök, etc. Preliminary note. There is great difficulty in determining how many early Turkish words of this general form there were and what were the qualities of their vowels and final consonants. Nac'a had the same difficulty, see the quo. fr. the Muhikamatul-lujatayn in Vel., p. 370 (top) where five alternative meanings are given.: sky, melody, seam, cauterization (see 4 kök) and vegetation. After the correction mentioned under kep has been made Kaj. lists three words with a short vowel and ten (some alternative meanings of the same word) with a long one. The first three mean 'pain, suffering' (kök or kük?); 'root' (kök) and 'thong (kök) respectively. There is also another apparently early word meaning 'seam' or the like (kök). If this really is the word in Uyğ. it can hardly be a l.-u. fr. Pe. kök 'basting', and in that event the Pe. word may be a Turkish l.-u., but the status of the word is a little uncertain. Of the second ten the first (and so presumably the next six) are described as ending in -g, and the eighth (and so presumably the other two) as ending in -k. The first two 'metre' and 'melody' are alternative translations of the same word kük and the third a 'popular joke' is an extended meaning of it. The fourth and fifth relating to animals were also certainly kük. The sixth and seventh, 'rust' and 'freckles', must be alternative translations of the same word which does not seem to be traceable elsewhere, but was perhaps kük. The eighth and ninth 'sky' and 'sky coloured' are alternative translations of kök. The last entry is a phr. meaning 'a village headman' otherwise traced only in KB; it is possible that the first element is the same word as the preceding.

1 kök 'root, origin', lit. and metaph.; described by Kaj. as Oğuz/Kip. but occurs in KB; survives in NE Tuv.: SW Az., Osm., Tkm. Cf. tüb, tőz, yzłz. Türkî VIII I E 3, II E 2 (2; oksz): Xak. xi KB bular erdi dín ham şari at kökli 'these were the roots of the faith and religious law' 59; iki neq turur aşlı yıldız kökli 'his food is the roots of plants' 6155; o.o. 318 (kaz.-), 821, 2015, 2183, 5907: XIII(?) At. kökli körküljil eşiş dom körküljii ol 'a man of fine family has a fine disposition' 317: Tef. kök 'lineage, origin, root' 182: XIV Müh. Mel. 49, 2; kök Rif. 143: Çağ. xv ff. kök rıga-i dirax 'the root of a tree' San. 307v. 18: Kip./Oğuz xi kök al-aşl; hence one says kökli kim minman aşılıl ça ila man tantami minal-gabaiyil 'who is your ancestor, and to what tribe do you trace your origin? Kaj. Id. 83; al-cins kök ( fiyatır) Bul. 5, 6: xiv ('sky') kök also al-cins in the sense of the races of mankind like Türk, Râm, and Haşaga Kav. 58, 2; cis kök Tuh. 11b. 12.

2 kök 'thong' and the like. Survives in NC Kir.; NW Kk. kök 'a leather thong used to hold together the framework of a yurt; a narrow thong used by cobblers'. Xak. xi kök rabûl-sarC 'the thong fastening a saddle'; prov. er sözil: bir eder kökli: üç 'it is a sign of manliness to have one word and not to go back on it, just as there are three thongs on a saddle-bow (rapt hamertl-sarC); if there were one more the saddle-bow (al-qar büs) would break because of the excessive number of holes in it, and if there were less, the two thongs would not take the weight of a man Kaj. II 283.

3 kök 'seam' or the like. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. kök 'seam' R II 1221; (Tuv. kökte 'to sew (together), to file (papers) and the like): SC Uzb. kök 'basting, oversewing'. Uyg. vii ff. Cwv. (if a mouse) yöğerkan kökli kökli isirsar 'bites a blanket or its own(?) seams' TT VII 36, 10-11; (in a document about the issue of cloth) Semiske tonka kökli (so read) bir böz bértim 'I gave Semis one (roll of cloth) for a garment and its seams?' USp. 38, 8-9: Çağ. xv ff. kök (1) birxhâ-i buzurq ki bar cama wa amtal-i dûn zadand 'large seams which they make in a garment and the like' San. 307v. 14 (bix normally means 'root', but must here mean 'seam' or perhaps 'basting'); yana kök tikerde köklemek dûr 'again there is the verb 'to make seams' (or 'to baste') for sewing seams' Vel. 370, 4-5 (quotn. fr. Nac'al).

4 kök (g-) basically 'the sky'; hence 'sky-coloured, blue, blue-grey', etc.; for a similar range of colours cf. yasılı. Si.a.m.lg. in both meanings except NE, where it has only the second (various Sec. fs of teprl: reburrowed fr. Mong. being used in the first); in SW Osm. gök (before vowels gög ...) ; Tkm. gök (gög ...); these forms and Az. köy suggest that, in spite of Kaj.'s categorical statement that the final was -k, the original form may have been gög. See Doerfer III 1677. Türkî VIII üze: kök teprl: asra: yağız yer kuintukda: 'when the blue sky above and the brown earth below were created' I E 1, II E 2; kök teypin 'their grey squirrel skins' II N 12, S 12; kök (VU) 69 nam of a river T 15; (I E 3, II E 4, see oksz); vii ff. kök yürüyüs 'a blue white stone' Toy. 5 (ETY II 57); o.o. do. 21; Irk B 64 (biumyl): Man. üze on kat kök asra segız (sic) kat yër 'the ten-fold skies above and the eight-fold earth below' Chusas. 42-4; Uyg. vii ff. VUF 1 küğ 'Song, melody', and the like: L.-w. fr. Chinese chü, Middle Chinese k'ok, 'song' (Giles 3,062). Survives in most NE languages; NC Kir., Kxz.; SC Uzb. as küg, küy; L.-w. in Pe. as küg in such phr. as küg kardan 'to tune (an instrument)'. Uyğ., VIII ff. Man. tükdin Afrin Çor Tégin küglî 'here ends Afrin Çor Tégin's hymn' M II 8, 19; a.o. (j) do. 7, 1-2 (takşut: Xak. xi küg 'with -g') 'arûd'ü'-fi'-' the metre of a poem'; one says bu: yir ne: küg üze: ol 'what is the metre of this poem?' (gazal): küg 'the tune of a song' (al-lahn fi'l-ğinda); hence one says er küglenli: gânâ-1-ragul bi-l-lahn lahu 'the man sang a song in its (right) tune'; (in a verse, misplaced after 3 küg) kûgler kamûg tûzûlî: waqa'-âtti-1-mudâqqa bajn alîhînî-ğinda 'harmony has been established between the tunes of the songs' Xaz. II 131: Çagh. VU 2 küg immediately follows the two words of 1 küg, and prob. merely an extended meaning of that word, since there is a similar combination of meanings in Khak. Xak. xi küg the word for any 'joke' (aḏiluha) which circulates among the people of any town during some year and is passed from mouth to mouth; hence one says bu: yîl küg keldî: 'this year's joke has arrived' Xaz. III 131.

?D 3 küg no doubt Dev. N./A. fr. kü-; survives only(?) in NC Kxz. küy 'the tending of livestock'; this word also means 'the condition of livestock', which may belong here, or be an attenuated meaning of 4 küg. Xak. xi küg yîlk: al-dâbâbatul-âmarîha acma 'cattle driven out to pasture in a herd' Xaz. III 131 (followed by a verse illustrating 1 küg).

4 küg survives in the NC Kir. phr. küg küel- (of sheep and other female animals) 'to be on heat, ready to be mated'; Kxz. küy (see 3 küg) seems to have the same meaning, cf. küylô- (of cattle, sheep and dogs) 'to mate' R II 1420. Xak. xi küg nîdâl'-kaîb wa'll- tûxûs fi awînîhi sâtiyâ(n), 'the mating of rams and wild animals in the mating season in winter'; hence one says köy küğ: boldi; 'the mating season for sheep (etc.) has arrived' Kaş. III 132.

PU sü: Hop. leg. in both senses; for 'rust' the ordinary words are bas and 2 tat; there is no generally accepted 'Turkish word for 'freckle'; SW Ösm. uses çi:li, but most languages use words derived, with some phonetic changes, fr. Mong. sebğil. *Xak. xi sü: 'the rust' (al-ţi:; MS. fâb) which forms on the surface of a mirror; hence one says közü:ke: sü: tüstü: 'greeness (al-xüdra) and rust have formed on the surface of the mirror': sü: 'freckles' (al-kalaafa) which appear on the faces of women (etc.) Kaş. III 132.

PU kük (or 6 küg) 'suffering, distress'; prob. n.o.a.b.; R II 1417 notes a NC Kzx. (?) phr. kiy kör: 'to suffer pain, or distress', but there is no other trace of it and there are in NC several words with a similar meaning which go back to kü:n-. See kükmek. Uyg. viii f.f. (D) keklič 'partridge'; prob. A.N. (Conc N.) fr. *kek as an onomatopoeic for the partridge's call. S.ı.a.m.1.q., except NE. There is another word for 'partridge' not noted before the medieval period, see čiː. Acc. to Red. in Osm. keklik is 'partridge' in general and 'the red-legged partridge' in particular and či is 'the common grey partridge' and 'the francolin'. See Doerfer III 1639. Uyğ. VIII ff. Civ. keklik (sic) čiː 'the bile of a partridge' (H I 50:2) Xak. xi keklik al-gace 'partridge' Kaʧ. D. V. GGL-
D kökle:- etc. Preliminary note. Kaʧ. lists Den. V's fr. 3 kök and 1 and 3 kük and Refl. Den. V's fr 1 kök and 5 kük; the basic form of the first survives in NE. There is in KB a Den. V's fr. 4 kök. There is in Uyğ. VIII ff. Man.-A M III 29, 10 (iii) a word kökleynür of which the meaning is entirely obscure. These seem to be the only early words of this form. San. 307r. 26 lists a Den. V's fr. 2 kök which s.i.s.m.l.

D 1 kökle:- Den. V's fr. 3 kök; 'to fasten with thongs'. Survives in NC Kir. kökto- and perhaps some other languages unless these are Den. V's fr. 2 kök. Xak. x1 ol eder kökledi: şadda raːt那就是 'he tightened the thong of the saddle' Kaʧ. III 300 (kökler, köklemek).

D 2 kökle:- (g-) Den. V's fr. 4 kök; 'to be blue, grey, green, etc.' Survives in NC Kir. kökto:- SC Uz�. kükha- and perhaps elsewhere, but köker-, q. v., is commoner in this sense. Xak. xI KB (hear the words of) kari köklememiş 'the old greyheaded man' 1492.

D 1 küge:- Den. V's fr. 1 kük; 'to sing' and the like. Survives in NC Kir. kuːː[toː-]/kuːː[toː- 'to tune' (a musical instrument): Osm. kökle- ditto (unless the latter is a Den. V. fr. Pe. kük). Xak. x1 er kügeledi: taːʃanːal-racul biːniːya wa aːrara lāːn fil-ğinā 'the man sang a song and brought out the melody in singing it' Kaʧ. III 301 (kükrer, kügelemek). Çağ. xv ff. kükле: ('with k-k') sāːzaːl- 'to play (or tune?) a musical instrument' Vel. 369 (quots.); kükleː sāːzaː kāːk harkel 'to tune a musical instrument' San. 307r. 26 (quotns.).

D 2 küge:- Den. V's fr. 3 kök; 'to graze'. As pasture is green there was an obvious temptation to regard this V. as identical with 2 kökle:-; this seems to be at the back of the entry kökle- 'to graze, put cattle out to graze' in Van. 330, reproduced in R I 1227 as Çağ. Bokharā; but the Refl. f. küylen:- (of cattle) 'to be well-nourished' in NC Kız. preserves the earlier form. Xak. x1 āičā külgedi: ihtaqalatl-i-dawāb wa okalalatl-i-rabi 'the cattle grazed and eat the spring pasture' Kaʧ. III 300 (küger, kügelmek).

D kökle- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of 1 kökle:-; this V. is listed under the cross-heading 'D' (for the third consonant) which suggests that the original entry had kökdet-; the alternative form is morphologically inexplicable. The d- suggests that the original form of 3 kök was köğ but the modern NC forms do not support this. See sıːktat-. Xak. x1 ol eder yalılın kökletti: 'he ordered that the straps of his saddle-bow should be tightened' (bi-sadd); kökdedit (sic) alternative form (lʊŋa) Kaʧ. II 327 (köklelür, köklemek).

D 1 köklen- Refl. Den. V. fr. 1 kök; survives in SW Osm. köklen- 'to take root, be firmly established'. The basic form survives in NE Alt., Tel. köktö- 'to be related to (someone)' R II 1228. Xak. x1 er kökledi: taːʃaːtala-racul 'the man was well rooted' (i.e. of good family); also used for 'to stay in one place' (ganim) Kaʧ. II 253 (köklenür, köklemek).

D 2 köklen- Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of 1 kökle:- Xak. x1 eder kökledi: 'the thongs of the saddle were tightened' (yuddat) Kaʧ. II 253 (no Aor. or Infn.; followed by 1 köklen-).

D 1 küglen- (küɡlen-) Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of 1 kügle- Xak. x1 er kügledi: 'the man sang' (ganim); originally küglenli: Kaʧ. II 253 (küglenür, küglemek); o.o. II 255, 9; III 131 (1 külğ).

VUD 2 küglen- (küğlen-) Hap. leg.; Refl. Den. V. fr. 5 kük Xak. x1 yuːzı: anıŋ küglediː 'freckles (al-kulfa) appeared on his face'; originally küglediː: Kaʧ. II 253 (no Aor. or Infn.; followed by 1 küglen-).

D 1 kökle- Recip. Den. V. fr. 1 kök; cf. 1 kökle-. Survives in SW Osm., where it is syn. w. kökle-. Xak. x1 ol anıŋ birle köklešdili: tasaːbaːtə biːhı wa taːsaːbaːk 'he clung to him and wrapped himself round him'; there is a dialect form köklešdii (2 kökleš-follows here): Bulgar x1 ol anıŋ birle köklešdii: taː'aːqqaдает maːahu 'aqdaːl-i-ajraː 'he made a tribal union with him' Kaʧ. II 224 (köklešür, köklemek; one of the four Bulgar words in Kaʧ.).

D 2 kökle- Hap. leg.; Co-op. f. of 1 kökle- Xak. x1 ol anar eder köklešdii: 'he helped him to tighten (fi sədd) the thongs of the saddle-bow' Kaʧ. II 224 (no Aor. or Infn.; see 1 kökle-).

PU) kümek/kümen (kümgem/kü gömen) \Hap. leg.; Den. N./A.s fr. küg (6 küg); the latter in this entry is unvocalized, and misvocalized in the main entry; these words seem to be vocalized with katka but there is no doubt that the vowel was rounded. The second form seems to be the name, customarily transcribed kömen of the Tannu Tuva mountains mentioned in Türkü viii I E 17, etc., T 23, 28; if so the second consonant is -Q-. Xak. xi kömek er 'a man who has been tested (harasathu) by circumstances and endured sufferings (al-mihan) and become hardened (istadda) by them'; its origin is kük al-mihan; this Adj. kim properly or the Interrogative Pron. proper; parallel to ne: 'what?', but, unlike ne; never used as an Interrog. Adj. The concept of Relative Prons. was entirely foreign to Turkish, in which Participles and the like are used where Indo-European languages use Relative Prons.,
but when the Turks became acquainted with such languages, and religious works in them to be translated into Turkish, usually by persons whose native language was not Turkish, kim came to be used as a Relative Pron., and,
hastened by the phonetic resemblance, in all only in a passage in Rbg., directly copied fr. KB.

Unlike sevit ('Venus'), q.v., which has a possibile Turkish etymology, but was prob.
invented by the author, this word with its final
-d looks un-Turkish and may be a l.-w.

xiv and xv kértin· 'to believe, rely on' in four texts TTS I 471; III 460; IV 524.

D körtgür- (g-) 'to show'; Caus. f. of kör-· w. euphonic -t- inserted. It and the shortened form körtgür- are n.o.a.b. A new word körgüz-, which can be regarded as a Sec. f. of this word, appeared in the medieval period; the early occurrences are listed below. Another new word görsöe-, which is morphologically, but hardly semantically, a Caus. f. of körse·- is first noted in Osm. xiv and xv, three texts TTS II 456; III 312; IV 357. The other early Caus. f.s of kör- are körtür· and körgür·, q.v. There is a remarkable variety of modern forms, some languages having two or three. Usually these are completely syn., but, for example, in SE Türk körgüz- means 'to help to see' (e.g. with the help of glasses) and körset· 'to show', and in SW Az. kördürmeans 'to order (someone) to see to, i.e. do (something)' and köster· (a metathesis of körset-?) 'to show, demonstrate'. The modern forms, nearly all meaning 'to show', are as follows: NE Alt., Leb., Sag., Şor, Tel. körgül·: Kür. kökös R II 1262; Kaç., Koib., Sag. körtüs·; Şor körtös· 1265; Khak. kördür-/körgül·; Tuv. körgüz·: SE Tar. köret· 1260; körgüz· 1262; körset· 1265; Türk körgüz-/körset·; NC Kir. kördür-/körgüz-/körsüt·; Kzş. körgüz-/koreset·; SC Uzb. körgüz-/korsaat·; NW Kap. T. körgüz· R II 1262; Kaz. körtün·, Kk., Nog. körset·; Kumyk görsöe·: SW Az. kördür-/köster·; Osm. görgüz· (Red.: obsolete) göster·: Turk. gördür·/görkez·, Uyğ. viii ff. Man. M III 26; 11 (i) (odgurarati); 39.1-3 (ii) (addincii); Bud. körtür-gür occurs nearly 50 times in Kuan. esp. in such phr. as (Kuan-şi-im Pusar) burxanlar körkin körtgürür 'shows the forms of the Buddhas' (to those mortals) 103-4; in four places it is mis-spelt kötjür- and in U11 19. 11 (which is Kuan. 128) körgür·, a.o. TT VI 237: (Xak.? xiv Muh.(?) aradil'say he showed me the thing' görgüzül· Rif. 103 (only): Xwar. xitii(?) men saha başlap yonl körgürürmen 'I will lead you and show you the way' Og. 221-2: xiv körgüz-/körgüz· 'to show' Qutb 101; MN 429: Kom. xiv 'to show' körgüz· CCI, CCG; Gr. 154 (quotns.): Kip. xiv körgüz· arad gayrahu 'to show someone (something)' one also says kördür·, which is the original form (al-as); one also says köster-meaning arad Id. 81; arad köstér- Bul. 27v.: xiv arad körset·/körgüz· in margin körgüz· Tuh. 6b. 2.

D kertülr· Pass. f. of kertün· 'to be notched, gashed', etc. S.i.m.m.l.g. Xak. xii yıgaç kertülr· 'the piece of wood (etc.) was notched' (huzza); and one says kul boyun·: kertülr· 'the slave was humiliated' (gullila); derived fr. al-hazb but an expression for al-tadil Kaş. I 236 (kertülür, kertilmek); a.o. I 160, 6: (Kip. xiv insanafa 'to be broken, split' kertin· (sic) Tuh. 6a. 8).

D körük (ğ-) Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. kür-; lit. 'stretched out', hence 'broad, long'. Survives only in NC XIX Kzs. kérik (of journey) 'long' R II 1096 (not in the xx dicts.). In Kaj. the word, although vocalized kérik, rhymes with sevk, nellük, beďük and must originally have been kürük which is morphologically correct. Xak. xi in a verse containing several corruptions translated 'my friend, how did you get to us and cross the long deserts (al-mafáwwáz/ m-mad¡-) and' yaza: kürük (MS. balz: kérik) 'high mountains', Kaj R 94, 3; n.m.e.

D küreg Hap. leg.; Dev. N./A. fr. küre-; 'fugitive, runaway (slave, etc.). Xax. x1 KB 1118 (küre-).

D körük (ğ-) Dev. N. fr. kör-; 'observer, spy'. Pec. to Türük?. Türkii viii Oğuzdan-tan körük kelti: 'a spy came from the Oğuz' T 8; o.o. T 9, 29, 33; in each case a phr. like 'their report (sav) was so-and-so' follows.

D körük 'bellows'; this might be a Dev. N. (N.I.), but the only authority for körül - to blow with the bellows is Red. 1589 and this may be merely a back-formation. S.İ.a.m.l.g. except SC; SW Tkm. körül (prob. a false long vowel). The only meaning of körük in Vel. and the second meaning in San. is 'a hen which has stopped laying'; this meaning survives in SW Tkm. körül; in San. 305r. 26 it is said that the word, prob. kürük/kürük, is described as Persian in the Burhan-i Qâb"; this is prob. correct; it does not seem to be Turkish. Xax. x1 körük al-himlûte ve miniş-fâxi-haddad 'a blacksmith's bellows' (Hend.) Kaj 1 391; xiiii(?) D körge: (g-) Dev. N. fr. kör-; lit. 'the act of seeing' or the like. A rare word which seems to survive only in SW Osm. görgü 'experience, breeding, good manners' (fr. kör- in the sense of 'to experience something'); Tkm. görgü/görgü 'pain, suffering' (cf. the Türkü phr. lengek kör- 'to experience suffering'). Türkü viii (you yourselves have offended against your wise xogari ... ) körge: nin ucun ifidiims 'who nourished you because you looked to (i.e. obeyed) him' I E 23, II E 19: Xak. xi KB (I have ornamented my shop well) kili körge: 'for people to look at' 5108: xii(7) Tef. (he gave the greatest of them) T'şã yalawânci körge: 'the appearance of the Prophet Jesus' 185.

D körde: Hap. leg.; N. of Asoc. fr. kürk; 'of the same shape, a replica'. In a note on this passage, Hien-ts., p. 25, note 156, t. G. suggests that the word actually means nirmanâhayâ, the first of the Buddha's three bodies, the 'shadow body' which he can assume for certain purposes; this seems to be a mistake; the replicas were no doubt nirmanâkâyas, but the Turkish for that word was belgürme (q.v.) etöz. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (just as the Buddhâs, when they have entered nirvâna, by exercising their authority to ask for divine favour, in accordance with the wishes of mankind, by various distinguished rebirths) yaruklug körde:lerin orun orun sayu kodo yarîlkap 'deign to place their shining replicas in all places, Sw. 64, 6 ff.

VU kürs- Hap. leg.; listed as a Mon. V. ending in two consonants. The reference to sa:- is incomprehensible unless it is intended to be to the Desid. V. Suff. -sa:-/se:-, with the implication that the word is der. fr. I kür. This is of course impossible; the mis-spelling of the Infin. may be consequential from it. Xak. xi yığit kâga: ‘terror for kamkas’ köürsdî: ‘the young man was full (intama’a) of blood and fat’, so that he radiated gaiety (abdâ min nasih-‘l-muṣīn). The origin is that a vessel is filled with something, then after a short time (the contents) expand (intafəxag) until they exceed the limit of fullness (zāda ‘an hadd‘l-‘intīlā’); for example dough, when it is mixed with a little yeast and put in a dish and almost fills it, and is then left for a short time, expands till it overflows the rim of the dish (kürser, kürsemek—MS. kürse:me:k). D kezil (ğ-) Dev. N. fr. kez-; with a rather wide range of meanings, none very closely related to those of kez-, of which the basic connotation seems to be intermittence, 'a turn (which comes from time to time); an intermittent illness'. The word is spelt kezil in TT VIII and TT IX and with a different pronunciation. The name is pertaining to KB which seems to confirm the -ğ, but some modern forms point to an alternative final -k, perhaps going back to a parallel form kezek, a Dev. N. in -ek, but it is impossible to associate particular meanings with these alternatives. Survives in SE Turkish közık 'typbus' BS 524: NC Kir., Kxz. kezek kezil: 'turn'; kezik 'fever'; SC Uzb. It is generally believed, and is no doubt true, that no native Turkish word begins with İ; all the words listed below are either demonstrably l.-w.s or of a kind which might reasonably be supposed to be l.-w.s. It is also possible that there are some l.-w.s listed above in which the initial İ- is preceded by a prosthetic vowel. If so, these would be parallel to the l.-w.s with initial r- preceded by a prosthetic vowel, see R. Some Chinese and Indian l.-w.s with initial l- which occur only in Uyğ. texts have not been included below since they never became fully naturalized in Turkish.

No native Turkish word except a few onomatopoecies, particles, etc., originally began with m-, but in most Turkish languages initial b-, when followed by a nasal within the body of the word (but not in Suffixes), is changed to m- by assimilation. Words with initial m-, of which the original form has not survived, are listed here as main entries; the remainder are entered here only w. cross-references.

1 ma/1 me: perhaps an abbreviation of neme:; an Enclitic with several functions. (1) in some cases it is best translated 'and' or 'too', and indeed has been treated by some authorities as an independent word, although there is no real doubt that it is an enclitic. (2) in others it hardly seems to do more than give some emphasis to the preceding word. (3) attached to the Interrogatives, klm, ne: etc. it turns them into indefinite relatives, e.g. ne:ce: 'how much?', ne:ce:me: 'however much'. It disappeared in the medieval period except in a few words like neme:, q.v., in which it has become fused with the preceding word to form a new word. It is discussed at length in g. Initial r-, like initial l-, q.v., was a sound entirely foreign to the Turkish language and any l.-w. with initial r- which became established in the early language assumed a prosthetic, e.g. erti, erej. There is a sprinkling of Indian and Iranian l.-w.s in some Man. and Bud. texts without the prosthetic vowel, e.g. ratni, the Tokharian form of Sanskrit ratna, which later became erti, but these are not listed here since they never became at home in Turkish. In the Moslem period a number of Arabic and Persian l.-w.s entered the language unchanged, but those used in popular speech usually assumed a prosthetic vowel, e.g. SW Osm. uruc ‘fasting, a canonical fast’, a corruption of Pe. ruza. The only word with initial r- in Kaş is that listed below.

VU I sii: 'army'. The theory put forward in TT X, p. 19, note 206 that this should be transcribed sii: and taken as a l.-w. fr. Chinese shou 'to hunt' (Giles 10,013) is quite untenable since the spelling with s- is universal in texts in Ar. script. The word itself cannot be traced later than about xv, but the phr. sii: baş: 'army commander' lived on and, when sii: itself had been forgotten, was taken to be sii: baş: and used for 'water (i.e. irrigation) superintendent', an official of great importance in the Middle East, see e.g. SW Osm. sii baş: Sami 835, Red. 1188. This misunderstanding suggests that the word was sii: but this is not certain. Türkü vii sii: 'army' is common, esp. in the phr. sii: süler- 'to make an expedition'; sii: baş: İnel (sic) Xağan Tardu; Şad barzuun 'let İnel Xağan, the Tardu Şad, go as army commander' T 31: viii ff. sii: occurs several times in IrkB, e.g. xan süke: barmiş yaqışı sançını: the xan went to the army (i.e. on a campaign) and routed the enemy' 34: Yen. sii: has been read in several inscriptions, but the only clear case is Mal. 26, 8 (1 tef): Uyg. vili sii: occurs 8 times in Sw., usually in such phr. as sii: yorü: 'the army set out' N 6; [sii]: baş: ben 'I was the [army] commander' has been restored in the Side line: vili ff. sâp (sap) 'the handle (of a sword, knife, etc.)'; s.i.a.m.l.g. with this and extended meanings. The long -a:- in Kaş, seems to be an error

sâv 'a speech', etc.; the difference between this word and söz, if it is not simply one of chronology or dialect (söz is rather rare in sap-, sep- Preliminary note. There is great confusion about V.s of these two forms. The only certain form in Türkî is sep- ‘to repair (something broken)’, and the only certain form in Uyğ. sap- ‘to instil, graft’, and the like, although ‘to equip, fit out’ was almost certainly sep-. Kaş. lists only sap- and translates it (1) ‘to thread (a needle)’; (2) ‘to repair (something broken)’, but distinguishes between saptur- ‘to order to repair’ and septür- ‘to order to provide a dowry’, obviously a Ćaus. f. of sep- which is homophonous w. sep ‘a dowry’. On this basis therefore it looks as if the Türkî word was misspelt and Kaş’s two meanings go back to some common origin. Sap- ‘to thread (a needle), to inoculate, graft’ survives in SE Türkî: perhaps NW Kav. R IV 401: and SW Tkm.; sep- ‘to equip’ is not noted again. In the medieval period two apparently new V.s appeared, sap- ‘to go astray, deviate’, and the like, which is noted in xix NC Kax. and NW Kav. in R IV 402 and survives in SW Osm., and sep- ‘to scatter (solid matter, e.g. seed), to sow; to sprinkle (liquids), to irrigate’, which is practically syn. w. saç- and s.i.a.m.l.g. (in SW sep-).

sabu‘- (or sapit-)? Hap. leg., but cf. sabit-.

D suva‘- Den. V. fr. suv; originally ‘to irrigate (land); to water (animals)’, and the like; in modern languages later forms of sуваr- are used in this sense. In the medieval period it was used for ‘to plaster’, and this must also be an early meaning, see suval-, suvaq-. In this sense s.î.î.î.: asuba/-suba/-siva/-sua-. Òy. xii ff. Bud. PP 11, 3 (61): Xak. xî kanna‘ emdi: yêr suvâr ‘your blood now waters (yasqi) the ground’ Ka‘. I 498, 21; n.m.e.: xiiti(?). Tef. suva‘- ‘to plaster up’ (the entrance to a cave) 276: Çag. xix ff. suwa- (spelt) andid hardan ‘to plaster’ San. 247. 9 (quotns.): Tkm. xv layyasa ‘to plaster’ suva- (in margin ‘also pronounced şiwa-‘); Kip. şiza- Hap. leg., ‘corruption of suva-‘ Tuh. 328. 11.

D savci: N. Ağ. fr. sav; normally ‘messenger’, and so a less distinguished term than yalaçaq (a.l.w., q.v.); but as in this meaning it corresponded to Ar. rasil it was used by early Moslem Turks for ‘the Prophet’; in this sense it was soon displaced by the Pe. l.w. paygımbar and now survives only(?) in NE Tob. savci ‘go-between’ RIV 431. Türki viii ff. a savci: on a yellow horse and a yalaçaq on a bay horse bring good news IrKB 11; a.o. do. 55: Òy. viii ff. Bud. (if we have gone from one town, country, or realm to another as a) (Vu) tiçi savci ‘messenger’ (i.e. making mischief) TT IV 10, 21 (tinci is Hap. leg., prob. a N. Ağ. fr. a Chinese l.w.): Xak. xi savci: ‘a prophet’ (al-rasil) from among the prophets of God; its base is sav meaning ‘news, a statement, a proverb’, and the prophet communicates these things Ka‘. III 441 (and see Oğzus); a.o. III 154 (sav): KB savci ‘the Prophet’ (Muhammad) 30, 388: xiv(?) Tef. savci ‘prophet’, once in the Hend. yalaçaq paygımbar savci 257: xiv Muh.(?) (in a list of occupations) rasil ‘messenger, envoy’ savci: Rfs. 156 (mis-spelt suva‘); Mel. 57, 12 (êliči): Oğuz xi savci: al-rasil waşqul-sa‘if ‘messenger, envoy’, who travels between the families of an intended bridegroom and bride with messages Ka‘. III 441; a.o. III 154 (after sav) same translation, adding ‘because he reports the statements of one to the other and vice versa, as I have explained’; not here described as Oğuz: Xwar. xii savci (with triply dotted ta‘de) ‘prophet’ Ali 48: Kip. xiv savci: (‘-) ‘one concerned with disputes (mansub ilâl-da‘wa‘), in the sense of differences between two adversaries; such a person must be a qâdi; and şawci: is used for ‘prophet’ (al-nabi); they say şawmu ‘our prophet’ meaning the ‘Prophet’, God bless him Id. 61.

D suva‘: N. Ağ. fr. suv; sî.i.m.l. for ‘water-seller, water-carrier, mariner, swimmer’, etc. Òy. viii ff. Bud. kim yerci suvaqi kemiqi bar erser ‘if there are any guides, pilots, or boatsmen’ PP 22, 4–5; a.o. do. 23, 8; Civ. (in a charter of immunities) borlükuşta Şefiçiciler suvaqi kirmedin ‘the people who cut the streams and the water superintendent must not enter his vineyard’ USp. 88, 45–6 (as the V. is kes- ‘to cut’, not kavz- ‘to dig’, the first were presumably labourers who cut the banks to release irrigation water): Çag. xv ff. suçi (spelt) sâqi wa adab dar ‘cup-bearer; butler’ San. 239r. 9 (quotns.).

D sevit Caus. Dev. N. fr. sv-; lit. ‘one that causes love’, rather than ‘one who loves’; ‘the planet Venus’. For practical purposes Hap. leg., the only other occurrence being in the passage in Rbg. quoted fr. KB, R IV 501, and prob. a word invented by the author of KB. Cf. colpan. Xak. xi KB sevük yüz urundı beşinci Sevit, seve baktı erse sen öznı avıt ‘fifth, Venus put her lovely face (in the sky); when she looks lovingly at you, enjoy yourself’ 135.

PUF sibbit Hap. leg.; no doubt a l.w., presumably, in Kâşgar, Indo-Iranian; cf. Pe. sibit ‘dil, Anethum graveolens’. Kâşgar xi sibbt al-kuşbara ‘coriander’ Ka‘. I 356.

D savdiç prima facie a Den. N. in -diç, cf. tardîç, sâdîç, but there is no semantic connection w. sav and it may be, like other names of artefacts, a l.w. Cf. savdiçan-, which fixes the vowels. N.o.a.b. Xak. xi savdiç al-qafî‘atîlâtî turmoil mina‘l-âşân ‘a basket plaited from twigs’, used for carrying fruit, etc. Ka‘. I 455.

DIS. S B D-

D sabit- (or sapit-)? Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of sabt-. Xak. xî at kudrucsabbiti ‘the horse waving (harraka) its tail’; and one says it kudrak sabittu: 'the dog wagged (baṣṣaṣu) its tail' Kaṣ. II 298 (sabittur, sabitmark); bu: at ol kudrak sabitgān 'this horse is constantly waving its tail'; also of a dog when it wags its tail, when it asks for food or sees its people (ahlahu) and fawns on them I 513.

D sevit- Caus. f. of sev-: 'to make (other people) love (oneself)'. N.o.a.b., but fairly common in KB. Cf. sevtīr-. Uyq. viii ff. Bud. (Queen Bhadrā every day made gracious affectionate speeches to the king) etożin sevītiğel ifćin 'in order to make him love her body' U III 54, 16-17; o.o. TT V 28, 119 etc. (ayat-): Xak. xi KB (this wicked world) sevītir sunup tuṣta bérmez elig 'ingratiates itself to you, but if you reach out to grasp it, does not give you its hand' 400; (hear the words of) sevītmış kışi sevītse kışi kör mün ērdem başi 'the man who has made himself loved; if a man makes himself loved his faults are (regarded as) the height of virtue' 533; o.o. 582, 594, 3704.

D suvat- Caus. f. of suva-; as such n.o.a.b., but other later forms of this V. and suvargar-form parallel Caus. f.s subat-, suvart-, etc. w. similar and extended meanings. Uyq. viii ff. Bud. U I 29, 6-7 (eṣi}: Çağ. xv ff. suvat- Caus. f.; anhadi hårdan 'to order to plaster' San. 247v. 23.

PUD subit- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of subit-; cf. subula-. Xak. xi òl nepni: subit: 'he tapered (alala) the thing, that is constricted its sides and lengthened it' (yuḥaddid tarlaḥu wa yutawwalaḥu), as, for example, a nail Kaṣ. II 298 (subitūr, subitmark). D saptur- Caus. f. of sap-; n.o.a.b. in its original meaning but s.i.s.m.l. as the Caus. f. of sap- in its later meanings. Xak. xi ol maṇa: kuṣ kaṭaṭn sapṭurdu: 'he ordered me to join up (i.e. mend, bi-raqūl) the falcon's (al-bāzi) wing' (etc.); also used for mending (rafa) anything Kaṣ. II 183 (sapṭurur, sapṭurmak): (Kip. xiv sapṭur- ankaba gāyrahū 'to lead someone astray' Id. 56).

1) septūr- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of sep-; precedes sapṭur- in Kaṣ. Xak. xi ol anuq kizin septūtirde: amara bi-tacli nitbitha wa zaffahi ilā'xatan 'he ordered that his daughter should be given a trousseau and conducted her to the bridegroom' Kaṣ. II 182 (mo'lat-arwāl maṣṭaraḥ bi-kāf, i.e. septūrūr, septūrmek).

D sevtūr- Caus. f. of sev-; s.i.a.m.l.g. w. the same phonetic changes and shades of meaning as sev-. Xak. xi ol (siq, superfuous) tepni: senii: mapna: sevtūrdu: 'God put love in (mawṢahabatāh) in my heart' Kaṣ. II 185 (sevtūrūr, sevtūrmek): xiii(f) At. aki bol akili seni sevdūrir 'be generous, generosity makes you loved' 260; Tef. sevdūr- 'to make (someone) love (something)' 265: Çağ. xv ff. sevdūr- Caus. f.: xuudra mahbīb hårdan 'to make oneself loved' San. 258v. 12.

D suwuk (suvuk) Intrans. Dev. N./A. fr. suva-; 'fluid, liquid', and the like, with extended meanings. Survives w. the same meanings in SW Osm. sivik (also cikvi); Tkm. suvuk, Cf. siviñ. Kip. xi suwuk (sie) 'anything liquid and runny' (māyi raqiq) like clotted cream and thick fruit juice when it has become runny (raqqa); hence one says suwuk yuğrut 'runny yogurt'; suwuk kudrūrk 'a long tail with very little hair on it' (gaḥāl'-ga); like the tail of a camel; also a tree (i.e. with few leaves), etc. Kaṣ. III 164 (the -w- with both dama and hatra everywhere): Tkm. xiii al-saxw waḥwa'/nār 'nīn 'soft' (opposite to 'hard' kāṭr); suvuk (MS. sava:bb); Kip. yumsk Hou. 28, 1; Osm. xiv ff. sivik 'liquid, runny'; c.i.a.p. TTS I 626; II 823; III 626; IV 690.

D sapgak Hap. leg.; this word occurs, in a list of words with four consonants which are arranged in strict alphabetical order, between camguk and saplik but is spelt baṣgak in the MS.; there is no doubt that it is mispointed and should be spelt sapgak; Dev. N. fr. sap-, lit. (the part of the body) 'which joins' (the upper to the lower part). Xak. xi sapgak mā fanaqāl-warikyn (the part of the body) above the lips' Kaṣ. I 470.

Dis. V. SBD-

(S) sivān- Hap. leg.; the word is quite clear in the photograph; prima facie a Den. V. fr. *sviṣ; there does not seem to be any cognate word, but the meaning is clear. Uyq. viii ff. Man.-A (then the magicians in the city of Babylon took a bow and arrow; they strung the bow and shot at Zrūq Buxan (the Prophet Zoroaster)) oki yana sivār ūz tami-rūpā tegdī 'their arrow turned to one side and penetrated his own vein' (the demon then died) Man.-uq. frag. 401, 8.

D sivār Trans. Den. V. fr. suv; 'to water (livestock); to irrigate or water (land)'. S.i.a.m.lg.; in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. suvar- NC Kzx. suar-; NW Kk., Nog. sivār-; Kir. Kumyq, and all other language groups sugar-. Xak. xi ol at sivārādi: 'he watered (sagya) the horse' (etc.) Kaṣ. II 188 (sivārur, sivārmark); o.o. in grammatical examples II 44, 18 etc.: xiii(?) Tef. suvar-
'to irrigate' 276: xiv Muh. asgāl-mā 'to irrigate' suwar- Mel. 22, 9 (istiqāl-mā) su: tart- Rif. 103): Çağ. xv ff. suwar-suwar- 'to moisten', that is to moisten mud, etc. Vel. 301; suğar- (spelt) 'to give water' (dīb dādan) to the thirsty; 'to moisten' (ṣirāb kardan); also pronounced swar- San. 243v. 26 (quotation); reverse entry do. 247v. 28: Xwar. xiv suqar- 'to irrigate' Qub 161; suwar- 'to water' (sheep) Nahc. 1.13, 12: Osm. xiv ff. suvar-, sometimes sīvar-, 'to water', etc.; c.i.a.p. TTS I 649, II 850; III 645; IV 714.

D suvgard- Caus. f. of suvgar-; s.i.s.m.l. Xak. xi if it is desired to form a Caus. of a V. ending in -r-, -t- is added to it, and (in the Perf.) the -d- (of the Perf.) is merged with it, the result is -t-, the -d- being assimilated, e.g. ol atin suvgarri: 'he directed someone to water (saqiya) his horse' Kaṣ. II 256, 2; n.m.e.

Tris. SBG

C sipakur Hip. leg.; Kaṣ.'s etymology is possible, but surprising, since akur, q.v., a Pe. l.-w., properly means 'a stable or stall', although used in the medieval period for 'manger'. It is perhaps a l.-w., and this a false etymology. Xak. xi sipakur al-milātā 'a nose-bag'; originally sip akurri: mlāflu-l-tani mina:l-xayl 'a manger for a colt that has cut its first teeth' Kaṣ. I 487.

D savikla:- Hip. leg.; the word is certainly so spelt, but there is no other trace of savik, fr. which it is a Den. V. This might conceivably be a Dim. f. fr. sav, in which case the V. might mean 'to talk incoherently'. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. [gap] ağżının tə:ğə ru: üntür:ür koğər saviklar köpli: aqlar 'he brings up (his food), grows weak, and talks incoherently; his mind wanders' (assuming an unusual scription of aqar) TT VII VIII 1.3.

D suvīgarism-n- Refl. Simulative Den. V. fr. a N.S.A. fr. suvīgar-; noted only in grammatical sections. Xak. xi the most correct way (of expressing the idea that a man pretends to do something but does not actually do it), and the commonest, is to add (to the Refl. f. of the V.) before the núm a mim and a sin (MS. šin), making three consonants in all, e.g. ol at svagarismind: 'he pretended to water (yuṣqi) the horse' Kaṣ. II 202, 12; a.o. II 261, 22; n.m.e.

D suvīgarin- Hip. leg.; Refl. f. of suvīgar-, used as a Simulative; in a grammatical section immediately before suvīgarism-; the MS. actually has suvīgar-; but the context shows this to be an error. Xak. xi if it is desired to express the idea that a man pretends to do something but does not actually do it, one way is to add núm (to the basic V.) before the dāl (of the Perf.), e.g. ol at suvīgarind: (so read) 'he pretended to water (yuṣqi) the horse' Kaṣ. II 202, 3; n.m.e.

D suvīgariš- Hip. leg.; Co-op. f. of suvīgar-; noted only in a grammatical section. Xak. xi if you wish to modify a V. in this section to express help (i.āna) in doing something or competition, you add. šin (to the basic V.) before the dāl (of the Perf.), e.g. ol ma:pa: at suvīgarîdi: 'he helped me to water (fi saqy) the horse' Kaṣ. II 201, 21; n.m.e.

D suvīg, sevük Preliminary note. These two words, the first a N.Ac. in -īg fr. sev-, 'love, loving, liking', and the second a N.Ac. in -īg (Passive), 'liked, beloved', must be carefully distinguished. This is not easy in der. and later forms, since sevük became suvūg by labial attraction at a fairly early date. Cf. saçıq, saçuk.

D sevük see above. N.o.a.b., displaced in the medieval period by words like sevgi; N.Ac. in -gū; or l.-w.s. Türki vii ff. Man. (if we have sinned) etöz sevįgίne yorıп 'acting in accordance with the desires of the flesh' Chua. 106-7: Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A etöz sevgiun uvutsuz işin 'bodily love and shameless behaviour' (i.e. sexual intercourse) M I 16, 18-19; sevęg özütülg nгоşaklar 'the Hearer with loving spirits' do. 28, 24; kentü sevgiun 'because of self-love' do. 34, 19; Man. sevįg köşülăr 'with loving thoughts' M III 34, 17; Bud. PP 78, 5-6 (amrak): Civ. Sevük Buyruk P.N. USp. 112, 2, (xiv Muh. al-ṣaddiq 'close friend' sevgi: Mel. 55, 1; Rif. 152: Kip. xiv (after sev-) al-mahbīb 'beloved' sevgü: Hou. 39, 16; xiv ditto Id. 54): Çağ. xv ff. see sevük: Osm. xiv and xv sevi/sevgi/sevgiun 'love'; in several tex. 6 TTS I 615; II 811; III 616; IV 678 (xiv sevgi 'beloved', once I).
sibek the basic meaning underlying both translations seems to be 'a long object in a central position'; survives only (?) in SW Osm. sibek 'an infant's urinal in a cradle'; XX Amat. sibek (1) ditto; (2) 'the iron pivot of a hand-mill'; (3) 'the tap-root of a tree' SID 1225; söbek (2) only, inter alia, do. 1247. Xak. sibek 'the pivot of a hand-mill' (qutub-l-rabāb), that is the iron (rod, al-haddida) round which the upper millstone revolves; sibek 'the hollow reed (al-qasāb) which is fixed in an infant's cradle for him to urinate in' Kāj 1389.

F sitir l.-w. fr. Sogdian st'y, which is itself a l.-w. fr. Greek stater 'a silver coin'. Common in USp. and Fam. Arch. as a unit of currency, occasionally as a unit of weight. The Dal. sitirika gives the quality of the vowels. Study of the documents shows that there were three units of currency, the bakir 'copper' representing the Chinese chien 'copper cash' (Giles 1,736) of which ten were equal to a sitir, the sitir, and the yastuk equal to fifty sitir.

As units of weight the bakir was a Chinese 'mace' or one-tenth of an ounce, and the sitir the Chinese liang 'ounce' (Giles 7,010). These words are discussed in F. W. K. Müller, 'Uigurische Glossen', p. 319, Festschrift für Friedrich Hirth, Berlin, 1920. L.-w. in Mong. as šičir 'refined gold, gold leaf' (Kow. 1508). Uyg. viii ff. Dis. V. Sûn-

D sağin - Preliminary note. The -k of sakin- was voiced at an unusually early period, cf. sakinç. This may have been due to the fact that the first vowel was originally long, cf. the spellings of sakinç in TT VIII. Thus fr. XI there were two V:s sağin-. In Kaş. I sağin- is listed correctly between süsîn- and soğun-; 2 sağin- is listed immediately before sakin-, three other V.s intervening between the two. Kaş.'s note shows that he was aware of the unusual status of 2 sağin-.

D 1 sağin - Refl. f. of sağ-; survives only (?) in SW Osm. sağın- 'to yield milk, or, metaphorically, moisture' RIV 265 (but few other authorities); Tkm. sağın- 'to milk for oneself'. Xak. xîr koyun sâgında: 'the man pretended to milk his sheep' Kaş. II 152 (sağınur, sağınmak).

D 2 sağin - See sağin-.

D sakin- (sakin-) Refl. f. of sak-; originally simply 'to think'; this meaning s.i.s.m.l., but in most it has come to mean 'to think longingly about (something); to desire', or 'to think anxiously about something, to be worried', and the like. In SW Osm. sakın- means 'to take care of oneself, be cautious, be on one's guard against' and (Trans.) 'to protect'. These are meanings appropriate to sakla-, saklan- and seem to be due to a folk etymology; in Tkm. sağın- (sic) means 'to stop and think'. Other modern forms are NE sağın-: SE Türkî sağın-, şegin-: NC sağın-: SC Uzb. soğin-: NW sağın-. More or less syn. w őz-, q.v. VUD soğûn- (soğûn/)-soğûn- Hap. leg.; in its first meaning Refl. f. of soğûn-: the meaning of the Ar. translation of the second phr. is disputed, but a Refl. f. of suğ- in the sense of 'to drain oneself off' would suit it. I saqîr 'a game battue'; n.o.a. Several Kip. authorities use this spelling for saqîr, but that is prob. a mere error. D sağıq Dev. N. fr. saql- (this, rather than salık, was prob. the original form) with a wide potential range of meanings. In the early period it meant some form of tax, and was the common word for 'tax' in the Golden Horde, see Caferoğlu in T.M IV, p. 41. It survives in this sense as sälîk in SE Tar. R IV 359; Türkî RS 386. Uyğ. vii ff. Civ. bıro̱ukunegi ki samlığı zakâti bolsar 'whatever taxes and poor-rates (Ar. l.-w.) fall on the vineyard' UsP. 2, 8; sæq bęrgü bolımı üçün 'because they have become liable to some form of tax' do. 25, 7; o.o. do. 14, 14 (bâsiği); 30, 5(%): (Xak.) D solak prob. Dev. N./A. fr. sola: Den. V. fr. sol; lit. 'situated on the left' or the like. Prob. the origin of Mong. solaqqil: 'left, left-hand; left-handed' (Kov. 1491, Haltoïd 343). Survives for 'left-handed' in SW Osm., but all other languages seem to use some form of the Mong. word in this sense. The Kip. xi meaning, not recorded elsewhere, seems to mean literally 'the organ on the left'; Käç.'s etymology is, of course, preposterous. Kip. xi solak- 'the spleen (al-tıhl); the s- is altered from t- (i.e. in talaq: vq.; this is like the (Ar.) word sitt for sids and tat tatt for (another example sitt) Kas. S suluk See sulułk.

D salkım occurs in two quite different meanings (1) 'cold; hoar-frost', and the like, and rather later (2) 'something pendulous, a bunch of grapes, ear-rings', and the like. In the first sense it is syn. w. sarkım, q.v., which is prima facie a N.A. fr. sark-; but sark- means 'to hang limply' and the like, so is semantically the basis of salkım in its second sense. On the other hand this is also one meaning of salıq,-q.v. The explanation is perhaps that *salkım- a der. f. in -k- (Intrans.) of sal-, also meant 'to hang limply' and is the basis of salkım in its second sense, and that sark- and sarkım are Sec. f.s of these words. But the connection between salıq- and its derivatives and 'cold' is obscure. Salkım in the sense of 'a bunch of grapes', and the like, survives in NW Kk. salkım: SW Aq. salıq; Osm., Tkm. salkım; it does not survive in a visible form of 'cold', but the cognate form salkım s.i.a.m.l.g., in NE Alt., Tel. for 'a violent (cold) wind', elsewhere for 'cool', or 'cold' (weather). Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. A Pe. word sân meaning 'manner, resemblance', and the like used in such phr. as badln sân in this manner, and as a Suffix, in words like pilסין 'like an elephant' entered Turkish as early as KB and s.i.s.m.l. as a l.-w. San' sân 'in small pieces' noted in Çağ. and s.i.s.m.l. is merely a quasi-onomatopoeic not noted in the early period.

san Preliminary note. There is one meaning in which san is not demonstrably a l.-w., though even there it might be. Otherwise in Uyg. san represents Chinese l.-w.s: (1) in U II 86, 4 (sanliq) it is a Sec. f. of tan, q.v.; (2) in H II 30, 144 it is the name of an unidentified drug; (3) in the formula narno san 'homage to the community' it represents tṣeng the Chinese transcription of Sanskrit saṅgha.

sen the 2nd Pers. Sing. Pron. 'thou'. The vocalization follows the same irregular pattern as ben, q.v., the Dat. having always been sapa:. In other cases the vowel was almost certainly -e-; spellings w.-é- are fairly common in some dialects, but it seems impossible to find any grammatical explanation of the difference. In Türkî sen was used both as Sing. and as Plur., the regular Plur. sîz not being found in these texts, perhaps fortuitously, but in Xak., q.v., it was regarded as uncivil to address anyone except an inferior as sen. C.i.a.p.a.l. VUF sıniş: Iap. leg.; 'louse'. No doubt a l.-w. fr. a Chinese phr. The second syllable is the common enclitic -i (Giles 12, 317), but there are difficulties about the first. The normal Chinese word for 'louse' is shihsē (Giles 9,299); there is an alternative word, Giles 9,930, Karlgren, Grammatika Serica Recens, no. 506a., which has the same pronunciation, but has as its upper part a character, Karlgren, op. cit., no. 383a., which serves as a phonetic sin/siin (both current) in Giles 4,584/64,804-6. Prof. W. Simon says that there is no evidence that it ever had this phonetic value in Giles 9,930, but as its presence in that character is unexplained (see Karlgren, op. cit.) it seems possible that there was once a Chinese word siin, or the like, for 'louse' which was later displaced by shihsē, a commoner word. Xak. xi sıniş: șin mān cinsi-l-bargit wa ālisbūhu/- -qamīl a thing of the flea family; I reckon that it is 'louse' Kaṣ. I 422.

Türkî viii Türkî (Pî) srî boðun 'the good (?) Türkî people' T 3, 11, 60, 61, 62.

sarî-, serî—Preliminary note. A good deal of confusion has occurred between these two V.s, chiefly owing to scribal errors in the MS. of Kaş and misunderstandings by Atalay, but the difference is made clear by a grammatical passage, I 37 ff., on the formation of the Infin., if it is correctly translated. It states that there are two Infin. Suffix._, -mak and -mek, the first attached to V.s containing (t) qâf; (2) gâyn; or (3) back vowels, the second to V.s containing (r) al-kâfûl-šulba (k); (2) al-kâfûl-râkika (g); or (3) front vowels (al-kalimatûl-râkika). Examples are given of each class, that for the last including the following; e.g. er telîm sorî: 'the man endured (sabarā) much', serîr, sermek: since the word has front vowels, the Infin. has -mek (kâfyâ(n)); do you not see that a similar V. w. back vowels (al-mušîbâ'a) has an Infin. in -mak (al-qâfi),' it is in the sentence beg anu: sardî: 'the beg reproved him' (zacarahu), sorar, sarmak (MS. sermek). Atalay indexed sarî—as sarî and serî and serme as sarî. In the medieval period and later sarî—sometimes occurs as sarî.

Dis. V. SRL.

D sırıl- Pass. f. of 1 sır; - n.o.a.b.; the translation in Kaş, which would be appropriate for 1 sır- and has no Pass. connotation, is inexplicable, but the word is used as an ordinary Pass. in KB; arldi: is a mere jingle, see 2 arıl-. Xak. xi beş aqar arldi: sırılldi: 'the beg (etc.) was angry with him' Kaş. II 123 (sırıl, sırılmak): KB (if a servant does something which does not please his master) ilenç özke kılıği sırılsta (Arat, serile:se) kâli 'he must blame himself, if he is abused (or ill-treated) 1610; (a man's mind is like brittle glass, take great care of it, or it will break, sarma aani 'do not handle it roughly') sırılsta kişi köpil ketti tattık 'if a man's mind is roughly handled, the savour (of life) has gone' 4611.

D sarul- Pass. f. of sarul:- this V. seems to occur in two consecutive paras. in Kaş; in the first the Perf. is spelt sıruld़; but the Aor. and Infin. are spelt sırul:-; in the second the Perf. is spelt sırıldi: but the Infin. is spelt sırul:-; the basic meaning is 'to be wrapped round (something)'. There is, however, one difficulty about this explanation; in KB, V. meaning 'to be attached to (something)' is clearly spelt sırıl:-; this might be a Pass. f. of sırıl: as a metaphor. application of 'to be sewn firmly to (something)', but there is no other trace of such a V.; sırıl- in some medieval and modern languages is a Sec. f. of sırıl-, q.v. Sarul- survives as sırıl- in NW Kaş; SW Az., Osm. and sarul- in Tkm. (Uyğ. viii ff. Man. sırılmlârka TT III 53 (ii-)); Xak. xi yığış yığışça: sarulld: 'the rope was wrapped round (illetafo) the tree'; also used of other things (sarulur, sarulmak; MS. sarul-); and one says yağı ellijke: sarulld: (MS. sırldls:) 'the oil stuck to (illetasaq) the hand'; also used when parts of something have stuck to something else, e.g. flour to felt (sırıl- (sic), sarulmak) Kaş. D sırıl- except perhaps in Uyğ. can hardly be a Pass. f. of 1 ser- (which is normally Intrans.) and presents some problems. In Kaş, it is clearly cognate to serifke: and the Pass. f. of 2 sır-. This V., w. the connotation of 'to be fickle', may be that in PP 78, 5-6 (see amrak) but the right reading there might be sarulur. In SW Az., Osm., Tkm. sırıl- is the Pass. f. of ser- with its meaning in those languages, and means 'to be spread out' (e.g. to dry). Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (when I enter sûya, my doctrinal teaching called 'good' without being extinguished, or diminished (yertincüde serîl turur 'will endure (or remain?) on earth' Svet. 164, 16-17 (cf. D sorul- (sorul-) Pass. f. of 2 sor-; 'to be inquired about, questioned', and the like. Survives in SW Osm. sorul-, Tkm. sorul-. In other modern languages sorul- is the Pass. f. of 1 sor:- 'to be sucked' and the like, not noted in the early period. Uyğ. viii ff. Man.- A M I 26, 27-8 (I a): (Xak.) xin(?) At. sorul- 'to be questioned': Çağ. xxv ff. sorulː (spelt) pusîda şûdan 'to be asked, questioned' (and makîda şûdan 'to be sucked') 240V. 10.
D surlul- Pass. f. of sür-, s.i.s.m.l. with the same range of meanings as sür-. Xak. xi at surlul: 'the horse was driven' (siga); and one says er surlul: 'the man (etc.) was driven away' (or repulsed, turida); and one says monçuk surlul: 'the beard was rubbed' (or polished, sühqa); also used when a thing rubs itself (insahha bi-nafsihu); Intrans. and Pass. Kaş. II 123 (sürülür, sürülmek; for the last meaning cf. sürtil-): xiiii (?) Tef. sürül- 'to be driven away' 279: Çağ. xiv ff. sürül- ('with -ü-') 'to be driven away'; metaphor. 'to be ploughed' Sel. 240v. 10.

D sarla- Hap. leg., but see der. f.s.; Den. V. fr. *sar, cognate to saru-, which might be a Den. V. in -u- fr. *sar. Xak. xi ol suvluk sarlađi: 'he wound (kära) a turban round his head'; and one says <ol> adakinca: yör-geñçi: sarlađi: 'he wrapped (laffen) a bandage round his leg'; also used of anything wrapped round something Kaş. III 296 (sarlar, sarlaçmak).

D silra- Dev. N. fr. sir-; s.i.s.m.l., but usually for 'to colour, glaze', but the like. Xak. xi ayakç: ayak silrađi: 'the cup-maker (al-qasṣā') smeared viscous paste (i.e. lacquer; lataxa ġüzicält-i-girä) on the cup to ornament it' (li-yummaqṣasıhā) Kaş. III 296 (sirlar, silrarmak).

D surlat- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of sarla-; Xak. xi ol suvluk surlat: 'he ordered that the turbān should be wound round' (bi-takvir); also of anything else Kaş. II 346 (surlatır, surlatmak).

D surlat- Caus. f. of sirla-; s.i.s.m.l. Xak. xi ol ayak silratt: 'he ordered that viscous paste (i.e. lacquer) should be smeared on the Turkish (sic) cup' Kaş. III 346 (surlatur, surlatmak).

D sarlan- Refl. f. of sarla-; n.o.a.b. Xak. xi er suvluk sarlandi: 'the man put on a turban' (ta'annama); and one says er yör-geńççi: sarlandi: 'the man wrapped himself (talaffafa) in a bandage'; and one says yip yığınça: sarlandi: 'the cord was wrapped (al幸福感) round the tree'; it is both Active (Refl.) and Pass.; and one says er 1şika: sarlandi: iasta adda'l-racil li'l-anal, 'the man made himself ready for work' Kaş. II 246 (saranlar, sarlanmak; the last sentence with unvocalized V. follows the Infin. but clearly belongs to the same para.). Osm. xv and xvi sarlan- 'to be wrapped in (something Dat.)' in several texts TTS II 795; III 600; IV 664.

D silra- Refl. f. of sirla-; s.i.s.m.l. Xak. xi ayak silrađi: 'the cup was smeared with viscous paste (i.e. lacquer) in order that it might be ornamented (li-yumnaq 'alayhya) Kaş. II 246 (silranur, silranmak).

D sarlaç- Hap. leg.; Refl. f. of sarla-; Xak. xi <ol> maşa: suvluk sarlaçdi: 'he helped me to wind (fi takvir) a turban (round my head)'; also for (helping to) wrap (fi laff) something, and for competing Kaş. II 215 (sarlaçur, sarlaçmak).

D sirm N.S.A. fr. ser-; in its most obvious meaning 'patience', der. fr. ser- as an Intrans., attested only by its P.N./A. and Priv. N./A.; in the meaning 'strainer', noted only in Kaş, it looks at first sight like a scribal error for *sizim, the obvious word to give such a meaning, but its existence is proved by its Den. V. serme-; q.v., and der. f.s of that V.; in this sense it must be der. fr. ser- in its rarer, Trans., meaning 'to endure', hence 'to hold back'. Xak. xi serim kull mä yuğattä bihi'l-ibrig wal-Hasar mina'l-ibrismi ta na hâvîli bi-yûsâfî bihi'l-sarâb 'any piece of silk or the like used to cover a jug or mug in order to strain a beverage' Kaş. D sürme: Pass. Dev. N. fr. sür-; lit. 'something driven, pushed', etc.; not noted before the medieval period, but s.i.s.m.Lg.; the commonest modern meaning is 'antimony, collyrium', presumably originally something rubbed (on the eyebrows). In this sense it became a l.-w. in Russian as surma and has been reborrowed, with back vowels, in some languages. It also means 'a sliding door-bolt; a sliding drawer in some languages. Xwar. xiiii sürme 'antimony' 'Alt. 55; xiv dito Qub 163: Kip. xiiii (under 'women's gear') al-luhl 'collyrium' sürme: Hou. 18, 5; xiv sürme: al-ipim dito Id. 52: xv fâhirîl'-nacãr 'a carpenter's plane' sürme Tuh. 28a. 3; luhl' sürme do. 31a. 10: Osm. xiv and xv sürme 'collyrium' in two texts TTS I 657; IV 718.

D sarmaṣ Dev. N. (connoting reciprocity) fr. *sarma-; lit. 'being wrapped in one another'. Survives w. same meaning in SW Osm. Xak. xī sarmaṣ ilṣîfûl-ṣayy 'bil-'ṣayy 'the involvement of one thing in another'; and if (the members of) a tribe have been involved (mâca) with one another in rioting (fi fitna) one says sarmâs boldî: Kaş. I 460.

DIS. V. SRM-

arma-, serme-: Preliminary note. There is n.m.e. for either of these V.s, but in principle Kaş. distinguishes carefully between their der. f.s. Unfortunately the distinction is blurred by scribal errors.

D *arma-: Den. V. fr. *saruṇa, N.S.A. fr. saru-; 'to wrap round, enfold', and the like. See sarmak, sarmaş, sarmat-, etc.

D serme-: Den. V. fr. serim; properly 'to strain (something out of a liquid)', but with a much extended meaning in Çağ. N.o.a.b. Xak. xi sermemiçi süttin kayan 'the cream has been skimmed off (sufiya min) the milk' Kaş. D sarmat-: Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of sarma-. Xak. xi ol yişiğiu: yığaçku: sarmatî 'he had the rope wound (alafta) round the tree' (etc.) Kaş. II 349 (sarmatur, sarmalmaş).

D sarmal-: Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of serme-*. Xak. xi anığ topn: başaça; sarmaldî 'his garment was wrapped (alafta) round his head'; also used of other things; this V. is Pass. (lâzim) Kaş. II 233 (sarmalur, sarmalmaş).

D sarmel-: Pass. f. of serme-*. Xak. xi balık sarmeldî: 'the fish was pulled out (uxrîca) of the water', as if it had been strained (sufiya) out of the water; and also tutmaş-; sarmeldî: 'the noodles (etc.) were strained out of the water' Kaş. II 233 (sermelûr, sarmelme:k; MS. -ma:k).

D sarmaş-: Co-op. f. of *sarma-; survives in SW Az. sarmaş- 'convolvulus'; Osm. sarmaşik 'intertwined'; ivy is a Sec. f. of this word, or a Pass. Dev. N. fr. sarmas-. Xak. xi sarmaşçuk (only cim vocalized) 'a kind of noodle' (i'tiya); the dough is cut up into small pieces like chick-peas (al-himmît); invalids, and other such people, take them in small quantities (yâhsîhâ) Kaş. I 527: ( Çağ. xv ff. sarmaş 'the name of a plant which climbs up trees', in Ar. 'asaqa or lablab 'bindweed, convolvulus'; in Rûmi (PU) serigen (Hor sarapan) San. 231r. 2).

D serimliğ P.N./A. fr. serim; 'patient'; pec. to KB, where it is laudatory. Xak. xi KB serimliğ kışiler 'patient people' 1310; o.o. 1317, 1867, 2480.

PUD saziçî: Hap. leg.; this word is in a small section for words ending in -nc- and a vowel; it follows tutunçu: under the cross-heading T, and the cross-heading Z, but precedes ka- rinçî:; which suggests that the Z and the z- are errors for R and -r-; there is in fact a possible etymological link w. sarîn-. PU?C sō:zęri: Hap. leg.; in a note in Kas. III 389 it is said that there cannot in Turkish be two consecutive consonants of which one is  ਨ  unless the other is a liquid (ḥarfu'l-dalāqa), that is l or r, and this 'rare word' is quoted as an example. The only vowel sign is a damma on the sin. There is no good morphological explanation of the word, but it might be a compound of sō:z and an abbreviated Dev. N. fr. apra:- 'to scream'. Xak. xı sō:zęri: ıkṣṭ: al-insānu'l-mihdär 'an incoherent, delirious man' Kas. III 389.
Preliminary note. It is reasonably certain that, apart from onomatopoeics and interjections, which are in all classes by themselves, no pure Turkish word originally began with ş-. The other words listed below are either words in which the ş- is a Sec. f. of š-, or less often ç- or t-, or words of a kind which are likely to have been borrowed from some foreign language, Chinese, Tokharian, or some Iranian dialect.

F şad Iranian l.-w. in a form not found in any known dialect, but cognate to Saka tâu, Sogdian 'fyêd, Pe. şâh, ultimately der. fr. Old Pe. xêmâyêla. In 'Turkish the title, ranking prob. next after xo:gan and bestowed by the xo:gan on some close relative, younger brother or son, often carried with it the duty of ruling part of the xo:gan's dominions, so that 'viceroy' is perhaps the nearest English equivalent, but not an exact translation. In Turkish, apart fr. one occurrence in Uyûg. and a very dubious one in Q. Preliminary note. It can be shown by the study of Turkish loan-words in certain languages and some other evidence (see Studies, p. 124, etc.) that some words which began with y- in VIII had earlier begun with d- or f-; where such evidence is available the original initial is added in brackets after the word. Words with initial y- have undergone exceptionally large phonetic changes in modern times; in most NE languages the y- has become c-, ç-, or some cognate sound, in NC, some NW languages, and SW Thm. c- or j-, while in other languages, esp. SW Az., Osm., the y- has been elided, esp. fr. words beginning w. yl-/yl-. On the other hand in Xak. and one or two other languages a prosthetic y-was added to some words beginning w. vowels, esp. t-/tl-. There is, however, seldom any difficulty in determining the original forms of such words.

PUF yabuq: a title of great antiquity, certainly going back to the Yüeh-chih, that is before the Christian Era, which has frequently been discussed by historians of Central Asia (for some refces. see Cef., p. 226). In the Turkish period it was, like saq, q.v., a title conferred by the xagän on close relatives and normally carried with it the duty of administrating part of the xagän's dominions. Although the yabuq: is sometimes mentioned before the saq he prob. ranked below rather than above him. After the Türk period the title seems to have lost some importance and Kaṣ. describes it as two ranks below the xagän, that is below the yuğruq 'vizier', q.v.; by this time the title saq had disappeared. The word is spelt yavuq in Xak.; the pronunciation in Türk is uncertain owing to the ambiguity of the Runic alphabet, but as it is spelt yapuq (in the Hephthalite version of the Greek alphabet) on a coin attributed by Ghirshman to a Western Türk ruler of the mid-seventh Century (see H. Ghirshman, Les Chionites-Hepthalites, Cairo, Institut français d'Archéologie orientale, 1948, p. 50) it was prob. yabuq:. It survived as the title of the supreme ruler of the Oğuz of the Aral Sea area until the tenth century, but most references to it are in non-Turkish (Chinese, Ar., Pe., etc.) texts. The Turkish refces. are assembled below. Türk viii (at the beginning of his reign Elteris Xağan organized his realm and inter alia) yavuq qan 'title: the name of a person who is ranked below rather than above him' and younger brother of İsvara: Tamğan Çor Yabuq: inlisi: 'son of El-emis Yabuq: and younger brother of İsvara: Tamğan Çor Yabuq:' Oingt 4; o.o. yuvuq; yuvka: Preliminary note. Kaṣ. distinguishes between these two words, placing the second first under the cross-heading G and the second

It seems originally to have meant ‘matted hair, or wool’ (cf. yapğut) and hence ‘an animal whose hair has grown long and matted’ and, more specifically, ‘a colt’, and ‘a man whose hair is long and matted’, hence perhaps its use as a tribal name. It became a First Period 1.-w. in Mong. as da‘agatci ‘two-year-old colt’ (Haemisch 30; da‘aq in Kow. 1570, Halted 445); the connection w. Mong. daqgha ‘a tangle or mass of hair’ (Halted 445); w. Den. D yapaka:kul in Kaş. this word in both meanings is described as peculiar to the Yapâ:ku; and Yemek dialects, which makes it fairly certain that it is a Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. fr. Yapâ:ku as a tribal name, meaning lit. (a disease or bird) 'peculiar to the Yapâ:ku: country'. This would explain why it has two quite different meanings, the first Hap. leg., the second not a generic term for 'owl', which is üğî:q.v., but the name of some particular kind of owl, not always the same. In the first entry the ya' carries a 'gramma', but this is an obvious error since with this spelling it should have followed the second. D yatíğ Dev. N. fr. yat-; lit. 'lying down' and the like. S.i.s.m.l., e.g. NC Kir. Jatu: NW Kk. Jattıv: SW Osm. yatt; Tkm. yatuv; the specific meaning in Kaq. seems to be Hap. leg., in this sense; all modern forms of yatık are Sec. sf. of yatık. Xak. xı yatíğ al-manam 'sleeping quarters'; hence one says ani: yatíğında: tutǘlg 'seize him in his sleeping quarters' Kaq. III 12: (KB not noted, yatık in 495-6 is the Acc. of ı yat and in the Vienna MS., 4704, an error for batı́g).

VUD yatuk Dev. N. in -ık (?) fr. yat-; this Suff. is very dubious in Xak., the word follows the entries of yatuk and may be a mis-vocalization of that word, cf. yltıtăr-; it is Hap. leg. in this sense; all modern forms of yatık are Sec. sf. of yatık. Xak. xı yatık al-nawm wäl-manam aydın (both 'sleep' and 'sleeping quarters'; hence one says <ol> ani: yatı́kmenta: tutti: 'he seized him in his sleep or in his sleeping quarters' Kaq. III 15.

D yatuk Intrans. Dev. N/A. fr. yat-; the general meaning is 'lying down, prone, prostrate' w. various special applications. S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE, SE as yatık/jatık 'prostrate, horizontal, gently sloping'; metaph. 'polite, modest', and the like. Kaq.'s first meaning is difficult to connect semantically and may be a l.-w. Xak. xı yatık the name of 'a woolen fabric' (al-tıp) woven of two kinds (of thread); the warp is wool and the weft cotton; yatık neıp 'anything thrown away and abandoned' (al-mattrı́h wäl-maniʃ); hence 'a slaggard' (or idler, al-kašan) is called yatık kılı́ı: and a section of the Oguz who live in their towns and do not migrate to other places or engage in raids (yapızın) are called yatık that is 'sluggards and wasters' (al-kušalı́ wäl-mattrı́hın) Kaq. III 14 (yatık follows): Çağ. xv ff. yatık surahi-yı pahn 'a broad squat goblet', called in Pe. baʕata (little duck') (quottn.); the translation of yatık/jatık as 'a musical instrument' in the Rami author (Vel. 407) is an error San. 326v. 22 (it is a mis-reading of yatı́gan, a Mong. l.-w. listed in San.): Osm. xv ff. yatık/jatık 'a broad squat goblet, or jug'; fairly common TTS I 795; II 1013; III 780; IV 855.

D ydı́ğ Dev. N./A. fr. ydı́ː; 'smell, odour (usually, not always, unpleasant); foul-smelling'. Survives in NE ydı́ːg/çı́dı́g/çızı́g; elsewhere it is difficult to distinguish between modern forms of this word and yid'. Uyg. viii 8. Bud. TT V 729 (ölğür), 445 (saslıq); Civ. (if a man's arm pit is) yidğ 'malodorous' yidığ keter 'its foul smell disappears' I 28-9; Xak. xi yidğ 'malodorous' (al-munin) of anything; yidığ ot al-harabal 'rue, Paganaum harmal'a in the language of Kaşgar; in the language of Uy and Barsgam it is called Hildrük and in Özgüc yüzerlik Kaş. III 12: KB 999 (tidğ); xiv Muh. (?) d'if 'stinking' yiyğ Ref. 165 (Mel. 66, 5 yr): Xwar. xiv yidığ/yidği 'smell, odour' (usually pleasant) Qutb 89; Nahe. 31, 7; 263, 3-5; 422, 11: Osm. xiv yiği (sic?) 'odour, smell' (not unpleasant); in several texts, transcribed yiği TTS I 834; II 1057; IV 891.

D yodug Dev. N. fr. yod'; survives in the like in NC Kur. joyu; Kxz. joyu: NW Kk. joyun. Cf. yodut. Xak. x1 yodug hwa an yu'xatul'racul bi-curm gäre'ri is used when a man is caught for someone else's crime; hence one says anıq yodug: tokındaki: asahbaha vôbäl cum gäre'ri 'the evil effects of someone else's crime struck him' Kaş. III 12: KB isîzke ot erdi yâgika yodug 'he was fire to the wicked and destruction to the enemy' 408; (your life is finished) iköńç ol yodug 'it is (the time for) repentance and annihilation' 1400; o.o. 3552, 4454, 4423, 5864 (yapçağı): Gancak x1 yodug 'a term of arrest' (sabû) applied to years; takes the place of yodut Kaş. III 13.

?E yodug: Hap. leg.; there is at least one other mis-spelling in this verse, and this word, which is morphologically inexplicable, is no doubt an error, prob. for kodug. Xak. x1 bakmas bodun sevişgûz yodug: yüzi: (MS. yidî): saranka: là (YU) yalta'ti (unvoiced,? error for yu'li'tat) 'l-quem i'îl-baxilî'l-baqîdi (MS. baqîzi)'l-kâhîlî't-râçh 'the people do not raise their heads(?) to the odious peevish-faced miser' Kaş. II 250, 3; n.m.e.

D yatgak Dev. N.A. (connoting habitual action) fr. yat'; lit. 'habitually lying down'. S.t.a.m.lg. except NE(?), in SAE as yatak 'sluggard' (cf. yatuk) and elsewhere as yatak/jatak 'sleeping quarters' and usually more specifically 'bed, animal's lair, permanent settlement', and the like. Xak. x1 yatgak hârisi- -nalîk veî-iînî te naḫwâli 'the guard (or sentry, there specifically by night) of a king, fortress, etc.'; hence one says yatgak yattu: hâta'il racul hârisi(n) 'the man spent the night on guard' Kaş. III 42: KB tüni yatti yatgakta 'he spent his night on guard' 952; o.o. 608 (turğak), 1606, 2533: xiv Muh.(?) Rif. 168 (only, arka): Çag. xv ff. yatağ/yatak xêcâbêh 'sleeping quarters' (quotns. Çag. and Rûmî); and metaph. päs teâ pâðâri 'guard, guard duty' San. 320f. 12 (adding that some lexicographers claim the word as Pe.): Osm. xiv and xvi yatak 'animal's lair'; in two texts TTS II 1013; IV 854.

D yâdûguk Hap. leg.; Conc. N. (N.I.? fr. yad'; lit. 'something which spreads out something'. Kip. x1 yâdûguk sûfya tâdil- -fara 'the feet of a mare's udder'; some of them say yazguk Kaş. III 27.

D yâdûn Pass. Dev. N.A. fr. yad'; lit. 'spread out'. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. yaykın/yaykkin; Bar. yaygûn, used in the phr. yaygûn (etc.) su: 'a river in flood', R 111, 7, and recently revived in SW Rep. Turkish as yaygîn 'widely used or seen; spreading' (borrowed fr. R 111 7). Xak. x1 KB begîg koña kiyla ya yâdûn âdzîg 'do not make a beg or a river in flood your neighbour' 4546.

D yatûk- Hap. leg.; Intrans. Den. V. fr. I yat. Xak. x1 yatugki kîši: yatik'te: 'the neighbour became a stranger' (yara . ananî) Kaş. III 76 (yatikar; yatmak). D yutûk- Intrans. Den. V. fr. yut. Pec. to Kaş. Xak. xî yülk: yutik'te: 'the livestock were severely affected (ihataraat, lit. 'burnt') by the snow', that is when they died of cold Kaş. III 76 (yatikar, yatmak); the same sentence is quoted in Il 21, 2 as an example of a Pas. (mâfûl) V, in which the Suff. -ik- has the connotation of being overcome (mâlub aw môhûr) by something.

D yatgûr- Caus. f. of yat-; s.i.s.m.l. w. the same meaning, e.g. NW Kk. jatkar- (sic): SW Osm., Tkm. yatir-; (Az. yâtrit-), but most use forms of the later Caus. f. yatgîz-; Uyg. viii ff. Bud. D yokla:- Preliminary note. Apart fr. the Den. V. f. 2 yok listed below, there is clear evidence of the existence of a Den. V. f. 1 yok at any rate in SW Tkm. yokla:- ‘to destroy, kill, expend (money)’. This Tkm. V. also means ‘to remember, or commemorate’, and there is a wide range of V.s fr. Çağ. omords which have more or less similar meanings: NE Tur. çokta- ‘to notice the absence of (someone or something)’; Alt. yokto- ‘to feel, examine’ R III 407: SE Türk yokla-yokla- ‘to look after, to visit (a friend to ask after his health), to inquire, verify, check’; NC Kir. Jokto-; Kzx. Jokta:- ‘to investigate, check; to discover a lost’; SC Uzb. yula- ‘to visit, inquire, investigate’; NW Kk. jokla- ‘to discover the loss of something’; Nog. yokla- ‘to visit’: SW Az. yoxla- ‘to check, investigate, feel’; Osm. yokla- ‘to feel, examine, search, try, test, visit’. While it would be just possible to regard these as Den. V.s fr. 1 yok in the sense of ‘to note, or investigate, the absence of something’, it is likely that some at any rate are extensions of the meaning of yoğla:- which developed when, with the adoption of Islam, the practice of holding funeral feasts was dropped and forgotten.

D yokla:- Den. V. f. 2 yok ‘to rise’, and the like. Survives in NE Sag., Şor (R III 2008), Tuv. çokta-, Khak. çokta- ‘to go upstream’. Cf. ağı-, ün-. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (the king said to his ministers...) yoklan bariğ ‘get up and go’ (to every street, etc.) UsP. 97, 32-3:

?F?D yek ‘demon, devil’; the old theory, which still has some support, is that this is a l.-w. fr. yakka, a Prakrit f. of Sanskrit yakṣa ‘demon’; as such this is improbable, yakṣa itself occurs in TT VII 13, 55; 16, 17; but it might be a l.-w. fr. a Sogdian or Chinese transcription of the Sanskrit word. v.G. in TT VI. p. 61, note 131 put forward the more plausible theory that, since yek often occurs in the Hen. yek içgek, in which içgek is a Dev. N./A. in -gek (connoting habitual action) fr. lè- meaning ‘constantly drinking’, i.e. ‘vampire’, yek is a Dev. N. in -k (her theory that it is a crasis of yê:gek is improbable) fr. yê:- meaning ‘(constantly) eating’, i.e. ‘glutton’. The only objections to this theory are (1) that a Dev. N./A. fr. yê:- should be yêk (cf. 2 yê:gl), not yek; (2) that an actual l.-w. yek might well have been taken for such a Turkish Dev. N. and içgek devised to match it, in order to represent ‘demons and vampires’. For ‘demon’ the word is now obsolete, displaced by Mong. l.-w.s in the NE and Ar. words like yâhûn, ibîr elsewhere, but survives as yek ‘hateful, hostile’ in NE Alt., Tel., çek in Şor, çek in Sag., ditto, and çeg ‘glutton’ in Sag., R III 316-17, 1945; Türkî viii ff. yek ‘demon’ in antithesis to tegrî ‘god’, and interchangeable w. şimnu:, q.v., is common in Chuas.; yek içgek do. 144-5: Uyûg. viii ff. D yigü: Dev. N./A. fr. *yig-., cf. yiglurt-; lit. 'close, compact'; hence 'a (tightly sewn) seam'. Kaj.'s phr. yiğü: yiğüç may be authentic, but the shorter form yiğüç is the common Uyg. phr. 1: yiğüç 'bushes and trees', see 1 ii; and it may be no more than a mistaken reconstruction of that phr. The only certain survival is in NC Kzx. yalın- Preliminary note. Yalın- as the Refl. f. of 1 yal- may occur in KB and certainly survives in NE Alt., Tel. yalın- (of lightning) 'to flash' RIII 167. Yalın- as the Refl. f. of 2 yal- is the only certainly old V., but is pec. to Xah. A third yalın- is first noted only in the medieval period; San. clearly lasted it w. yalîga:- and translated it (of a dog) 'to lick its master', but this translation seems to be based on this false etymology. The basic meaning seems to be rather 'to plead' and the like. If so, it is more or less syn. w. yalvar- but cannot be linked morphologically. None of these V.s provides a suitable basis for yalızuz, q.v.

D I yalın- Refl. f. of 2 yalı-; n.o.a.b. In KB 121 the meaning might be 'may the wicked man be stripped', but the translation suggested below, which is Arât's, is likelier. Xah. xii er yalındi: 'the man (etc.) stripped himself' (ta'arrâ) Kaş. III 85 (yalınur, yalınmak); KB trîllsûni terken kütî miqî kutup yalınsunû körme: karâkî utun 'may the king's majesty live with a thousand favours of heaven; may the wicked man be dazzled so that his eyes cannot see' 121.

2 yalın- 'to plead' and the like; see above. Survives as yalın- 'to plead, implore', occasionally 'to flatter' in NE Alt., Küen, Tel. R III 167; NC (yalın-); SC Ubz. (yalın-); NW Kk. (yalın-), Kaz., Nog.: SW Tkm. Çağ. xv ff. yalın- (spelt) saq zabân dar âwardan wa şähb wa âyinâ râ lîsidân 'of a dog, to put out its tongue and lick its master and friends'; and metaphor. lâbâ kardan 'to implore' San. 336r. 13 (quotns.): Xwar. xiv yalın- 'to plead'

PU?D yalpû-. Xah. xi KB 5972 reads (he spent a sleepless night; the dawn broke; in the flower garden a nightingale) su:nûnû tûdkîliq eşîltî and then three alternative readings (Fergana MS.) köprü y.îğû:dlî; (Cairo MS.) köprü y.î:gdî:; (Vienna MS.) turûp yîg-ladî: after 'sang an unintelligible song, he heard it with delight', the Vienna text, 'and stood up and wept' is obviously wrong. Of the other two texts the Cairo one seems preferable; the Fergana one is the same with -n- omitted. Arât took it to be a Den. V. fr. yalpû and translated it 'caught fire'; this is possible but not very plausible since the Sec. f. yalpû is pec. to Osm. It therefore seems likely that it is a Den. V. fr. yalî: and that the phr. means 'his mind became stripped (of care)'.

Its origin is Chinese čam (Middle Chinese yatam) to stop a stage on a journey (Giles 270) which it translates in the Chin.-Uyğ. Dict., where it is first noted. It was an early l.-w. in Mong., prob. direct fr. Chinese as cam (Hsinseh 85, Kow. 2290, Haltod 516, in the last two translated 'road, province'), became a l.-w. in Pers. as yam 'posting station; post-horse' and survives in SW Os. as yam 'post-horse; post-rider' Red. 2192 (now obsolete). It prob. reached Turkish via Mong., but the reason for the sound change c- > y- is obscure. Uyğ. xiv Chin.-Uyğ. Dict. i chan posting station (Giles 5,496 270) yamka (Dat.) R 398; Ligeti 279: Çaq. xv ff. yam ulak binecek at 'post-horse' Vel. 398 (quotn.); (yamču ulak 'post-ride' do.; a compound Pe.-Turkish word for 'the officer in charge of horses at a posting station for the post-riders' San. 337v. 7).

I yem used only in the plr. of yem; it may be merely a Sec. fr. of em, since ot em is also a common plr. and in U I 7, 4 ot yem follows immediately after otči emči, but Kaş distinguishes between the two words and in KB the two plr. seem to have different meanings. Survives only(? in NW Kar. T. otam 'balsam, spices' Kow. 241. Uyğ. viii ff. (Chr. U I 7, 3-4 (2 ot)); Bud. TT X 326 (damaged; 2 ot): Xak. xi yem al-afawih 'fragrant

VU yeme: (?yeme) with takîr; q.v., one of the two copulas in early Turkish, used both at the beginning of the sentence, where it normally means 'and', and later, usually in the second place, where it means rather also, too. In Syriac and Uyg. script consistently spelt yeme, which suggests that the first vowel was very short, but the evidence, where available, seems to point more to than I, or 2. Xak. xî urağut yenî-: the woman gave birth and laid down her burden' (waladat . . . ra wa'da'at hamla'da); this V. is used specifically (xașatâna) of women only; in the case of other animals the name of the offspring (al- -maclîd) is taken and the Suff. -lî- is added to it to give the concept of parturition (al- -mîlâ), e.g. of a cow one says inçe: kuza:ja:gu- lî-: the cow gave birth to a calf'; buzâ:gu- with Suff. -lî- (other examples follow). There are two possible etymologies (tıtyâq) of yênî-; one is that it is derived fr. the phr. yenîk nep 'a light (al-xa'îf) thing', and that she laid down her burden she became light (xâfât), yenîk'd: w. a kasa on the nîn, but the regular form for this meaning would have a damma (i.e. yenûdî); there is no good foundation for this statement. The other is that it is derived fr. yîn 'a body' (al-badan) and that the woman, when she gave birth, ejected (arxaci) a body (casad) from herself. Both theories are plausible (hasan) Kaş. III 91 (yênîr (sic), yênîmek); bu: urağut ol yenî-gü; (sic, the MS. has yênîneùgü): 'this woman is on the point of giving birth' (arxact 'al-lâl-tellâd) III 36: KB bodûn asqî artti yenip yülkeri 'the people's benefits increased, their burdens becoming lighter' 1654.

yay there is utter confusion in the Turkish languages about the words for 'spring' and 'summer'. Since yay, q.v., must originally have meant 'summer', yay must originally have meant 'spring', which is Kâ.'s translation in the main entry and is confirmed by its use in antithesis to kûz 'autumn' in one passage. But yaylar-, q.v., always meant to spend the summer (somewhere); and already in Kâ. yay is used for 'summer', in antithesis to kûz 'winter', in some verses. In modern languages the position is even more confusing; yay s.i.a.m.l., but yay has disappeared fr. some, and in others the meanings of the two words have become inverted. The following is a representative selection of the words for 'spring' and 'summer', in that order, in modern languages: NE Khak. casxi, çaxxi; Tuv. çax, çax: SE Tüürki erte yay, yay: NC Kir. jaz, jay; Kz. jazgûtu, jaz; SC Üzb. bahor(Pe.)/kûklam, yoz: NW Kk. bahar/kûklam, jaz; Kaz. yay, cey; Kumyk yazbaş, yaz; Nog. yazluk, yaz: SW Az. bahar/yaz, yay; Osm. ilk bahar (yay being a Sec. f. of yay: 'a bow'), yaz; Tkm. bahar/yaz, tomus.
