PREFACE

1. In the first two chapters of Turkish and Mongolian Studies, Royal Asiatic Society Prize Publication Fund, vol. XX, London, 1962 (hereafter referred to as Studies), I gave a brief sketch of the history of the Turkish peoples and of their languages from the earliest period (the eighth century A.D.) at which they become directly known to us down to the medieval period, and attempted to identify and name the various dialects and languages which evolved during that period.

2. The broad thesis of this sketch was that a unitary Turkish language, which was not genetically connected with any other language known to us, and specifically not connected genetically with the Mongolian and Tungus languages, took shape, almost certainly in the steppe country to the west and north of the Great Wall of China, at some date which we cannot now determine, but certainly long before the start of the Christian era; that this unitary language split into two main branches, 'standard Turkish' and 'I/r Turkish', not later than, and perhaps before, the beginning of the Christian era; and that during the first millennium A.D. standard Turkish slowly broke up into two or three dialects, which soon became independent languages. No substantial early texts of any form of I/r Turkish have survived, but there are in Chinese historical works a few words of Tavgaç, the language of the Turkish tribe called by the Chinese T'o-pa, who were the ruling element in the Chinese Northern, or Yüan, Wei dynasty (A.D. 386–535), and there are some Turkish loan-words in Mongolian and Hungarian which were almost certainly borrowed from an I/r language, by the Mongols probably in the fifth or sixth centuries, and by the Hungarians probably in the ninth. The slight remains of Proto-Bulgar are in a similar language and so too are a few funerary inscriptions of the Volga Bulgars of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. The material is, however, very scanty and I have made only a few references herein to words in I/r Turkish, and those mainly where the only surviving I/r language, Chuvash (Çev.), throws light on the phonetic structure of individual standard Turkish words. These citations are from N. I. Ashmarin, Thesaurus linguae Tschuvaschorum, 17 vols., Kazan–Cheboksary, 1928–50, cited as Ash. followed by the volume and page.

3. As I pointed out in Studies, p. 53, an essential basis for any scientific study of the comparative etymology of the Turkish languages is a list of all genuine Turkish words which are known to have existed before the various medieval Turkish languages were subjected to a mass invasion of loan-words from the languages of the foreign peoples (mainly Arabs, Iranians, and later Mongols) with whom the Turkish peoples then came into contact. The present work contains just such a list. I have endeavoured to include in it all the words known to have existed in the earliest known standard Turkish languages, that is Türkû, Uyğur, including Uyğur-A, Old Kirgiz, Xākānī, Oğuz, Kipčak, and some minor dialects, prior to the Mongolian invasion at the beginning of the thirteenth century, excluding, except in a few special cases, words borrowed directly or indirectly from the Indian, Iranian, and Semitic languages. All references to 'early Turkish' and 'the early period' relate to the Turkish languages as we know them in the eighth to twelfth centuries inclusive.

4. One of the special characteristics of the Turkish languages is the manner in which derived words are constructed from the basic words of the language by a process of attaching suffixes to them. It is important, therefore, not merely to compile a bare list of these early words and their meanings, but also to indicate what kind of words they are (nouns, verbs, adverbs, etc.), verbs being distinguished from the rest by the attachment of a hyphen, e.g. at (noun) 'a horse', at- (verb) 'to throw', and in addition, in the case of derived words, to analyse their structure and indicate from what basic words they were derived, since this often explains their semantic evolution. This is all the more important since, even at the earliest date at which it becomes known to us, Turkish had already had a long history, in the course of which some basic words had already become obsolete, leaving the words derived from them, so to speak, 'in the air', with no obvious origin; on this point see, for example, Studies, pp. 140 ff. In giving these morphological explanations I have used the grammatical terminology customary among English scholars of Turkish, eschewing the new terminologies which are now taking shape in some academic circles.

5. My second purpose has been to establish the original meanings of all words in the list and trace their subsequent semantic evolution by illustrating each word by a quotation, or series of quotations, of passages in early texts in which they occur. For this purpose I have examined all the surviving texts in the languages enumerated above to which I have been able to obtain access. These texts are enumerated in paras. 20–6 below.

6. The only words which have been included in the list without at least one such quotation are a few which can first be traced in an actual Turkish text only in the medieval period, that is during the thirteenth to sixteenth centuries inclusive, but which demonstrably existed at an earlier period for such reasons as that they exist both in standard Turkish and in Chuvash (in a distinctive form peculiar to that language) so that they must already have existed before the split between standard and Ifr Turkish, or that words derived from them are attested in the early period, or that they occur as loan-words in foreign languages in forms which indicate that they must have been borrowed in, or before, the early period. The texts which have survived from the early period are of course only a fraction of those which once existed and there are no doubt other words which existed in the early period but do not happen to occur in the texts which have survived. Some of these words occur in medieval texts or still exist in modern Turkish languages, but I have not attempted to identify and include them in the list, since the evidence that they were really early words is lacking.
7. A surprisingly large number of early words are hapax legomena (Hap. leg.), that is, occur only once, and have not so far been discovered elsewhere; they have, however, been included in the list because they seem to be genuine Turkish words and may later be discovered elsewhere; but the fact that they are Hap. leg. makes it impossible to determine whether they are correctly transcribed. Properly speaking the term implies one single occurrence, but it has been stretched to include verbs listed in Kaş with an enumeration of the Perf., Aor., and Infin. forms, since experience shows that if a word is mis-spelt in the Perf. it may also be mis-spelt in the Aor. and Infin.

8. When an early word has survived into the medieval period, I have also added a selection of quotations from the texts enumerated in paras. 27–52, and when it still survives in one or more modern languages I have usually recorded this fact also. There are two reasons for doing this: the first is that evidence of this kind is often required to fix the exact meaning and pronunciation of the word in the early period; the second is that, as I understand it, the main purpose of compiling a dictionary of this kind is not only to help students to read and understand the meaning of early texts, but also to provide a solid basis for the etymological dictionaries of medieval and modern Turkish languages which are now being compiled or will be compiled in future. I must, however, make it clear that my quotations from medieval texts and enumerations of modern languages in which a word survives do not profess to be as comprehensive as the quotations from early texts.

THE SYSTEM OF TRANSCRIPTION

9. The problems of transcribing early Turkish texts are discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 3 and elsewhere, and it is unnecessary to cover the whole ground again. There is, of course, no means of discovering exactly how Turkish was pronounced between 900 and 1200 years ago; the alphabets employed are all to a greater or less degree unscientific; the most that can be achieved is a broad system of transcription which will give an approximate idea of the pronunciation of the words concerned in the languages enumerated in para. 3. The transcription alphabet which I suggested in Studies and which is used here can best be described as the official alphabet of the Turkish Republic with one minor modification (regarding the use of ğ and ğ) and a few extra letters to represent sounds which either do not exist in Republican Turkish (Rep. Turkish) or, if they exist, are not represented by a distinctive letter. This alphabet was selected on the basis that the phonetic structure of early Turkish was probably much the same as that of Rep. Turkish, apart from certain sounds for which special letters have been provided. These sounds can be tabulated as follows:

10. Vowels. There are four back and five front vowels, all of which may be either short or long. The only additional letter is ę for close ę, a sound which certainly existed in early Turkish and still survives at any rate in some dialects of Rep. Turkish.

\text{long} & \quad a: \quad i: \quad o: \quad u:
\end{aligned}

\text{short} & \quad e \quad e \quad i \quad ö \quad ü \\
\text{long} & \quad e: \quad e: \quad i: \quad ö: \quad ü:
\end{aligned}

These are arranged, when circumstances demand it, in the following order: a, a:, e, e:, ē, ē:, i, i:, i:, j, o, o:, u, u:, ö, ö:, ü, ü:; note that u, u: precede ö, ö:.

In most, but not all, modern languages the vowels o and ö occur only in first syllables of words, but there is good evidence, which I assembled in 'Three Notes on Early Turkish', Türk Dili Araştırmaları Yıllığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff., that they were also used in the second and later syllables of many words in early Turkish. This evidence is, however, too fragmentary and imperfect, and in some cases too inconsistent, to justify restoring such spellings at the beginning of all the entries concerned. I have therefore entered all these words in the conventional spelling with u/ü in the second and later syllables. Where there is good evidence in regard to individual words that these vowels were originally o/ö I have entered these spellings in brackets, e.g. törü: (törö:), but I must emphasize that these sounds occurred in far more words than are singled out for this treatment, for example, in all words with the Suffix -uk/-ük (-ök/-ök).

11. Consonants. The conclusion reached in Studies was that the sounds which existed in early Turkish can be tabulated as follows, v. representing voiced and u. unvoiced sounds:

Liquids (v.) l r (Aspirate (u.) h)

The post-palatal sounds occur only in association with front vowels and the velar sounds only in association with back vowels, so only one letter, k, is required to represent both unvoiced plosives. The unvoiced labial fricative f probably did not exist in early Turkish as an independent sound, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of v in association with some unvoiced sounds. The voiced palatal sibilant probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but is noted as a secondary sound in one or two words containing ç, e.g. çöj- probably for cöz-. It also occurred in a few Sogdian loan-words, e.g. ajum, and a few other words, e.g. üjme:, which are probably, but not demonstrably, Sogdian loan-words. The labial semi-vowel w was not a native Turkish sound, but evolved as a secondary form of v in one or two languages like early Öğuz and also occurred in some loan-words. The voiced post-palatal g was normally a plosive, but may in certain positions have been a fricative; conversely the voiced velar ğ was normally a fricative but may in certain positions have been a plosive. The unvoiced velar fricative x probably did not exist as an independent sound in early Turkish, but seems to have arisen as a secondary form of k in association with some sounds, and also occurred in a few loan-words, some of them very old like xagan and xan. Kaşgari says that the simple aspirate h was not a native Turkish sound but occurred in some 'impure' dialects and in one or two words like ühi: in which it seems to be a secondary form of g.

The consonants are arranged, when the circumstances demand it, in the following order: b, p, v, (f), (w); c, ç, j; d, d, t; ğ, (velar) k, x; ğ, (post-palatal) k, (h); 1; m; n, ń; r; s; ą; y; z. Note that the letters are arranged in classes, and not in the normal conventional order, but that the first letters of the classes are arranged in the conventional order.

12. There are some particular difficulties in transcribing some early languages, of which the following are the most important:

(1) In Türkü there was a tendency towards dissimilation, so that when a suffix beginning alternatively with a voiced or unvoiced consonant like the Perf. suffix -di:/-ti:/-di:/-ti: was attached to a verb ending in a consonant, the unvoiced form was attached to a voiced consonant and vice versa, e.g. erti:, tapdi:. In Xak. the position tended to be exactly the opposite, at any rate to the extent that suffixes with voiced initials were attached to verbs ending with voiced consonants, e.g. erdi:, although cases of suffixes with voiced initials being attached to verbs ending in unvoiced consonants are very common, at any rate in our manuscript of Kaş. Chronologically speaking Uyğ. lay squarely between Türkü and Xak. but nearly all the alphabets in which it is written are so ambiguous that it is quite uncertain whether it was a dissimilating language like the former or an assimilating language like the latter, or whether the change took place at some date between the eighth and eleventh centuries. I cannot therefore claim to have been in the least consistent in transcribing Uyğ. texts, usually following the scriptions in the published texts.

(2) The Runic alphabet (see Studies, pp. 51 ff.) in which nearly all the Türkü texts have survived, the Manichaean Syriac alphabet, and the Brâhmi alphabet had different letters for b and p and for ğ and post-palatal k, the other early alphabets did not, and the Brâhmi spellings are very erratic; there is indeed some doubt regarding the phonetic value of some of the letters of this alphabet.
in its Central Asiatic form. It is therefore almost impossible to decide how some words should be transcribed. In some cases assistance can be got from the modern languages, but some of these have undergone quite considerable phonetic changes.

(3) Only one of the alphabets concerned, Brāhmi, had separate letters for o, u, dbh and ū, and the spellings of the texts in this alphabet are often inconsistent. In this case, however, the correct form can often be established if the word was a loan-word in Mongolian, or survives in modern languages; but the spellings in modern languages are often inconsistent, particularly as between languages in the Oğuz group and the rest.

13. The alphabet set out above has also been used for transcribing (or perhaps it would be more accurate to say transliterating, since the system adopted is purely mechanical) quotations from Arabic and Persian texts, with the addition of the following letters: ɬ, ɮ, ɬ, ħ, ș, and ƺ, ʰanṣa’, ʰayn’ and Ɂ for the unvoiced velar plosive, which must be distinguished from the unvoiced post-palatal plosive in these languages. In these languages, too, vowel length is indicated in the usual manner by a superscribed line, e.g. ā. The same letters are also used to transcribe Mongolian, but Sanskrit is transcribed in the conventional way.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF WORDS IN THE DICTIONARY

14. As pointed out above, the Turkish texts quoted in this book are written in a variety of alphabets, all more or less ambiguous, and it is often impossible to determine the correct transcription of a number of words; moreover, some words were pronounced slightly differently in different languages. It would, therefore, not be sensible to arrange the words in the strict alphabetical order to which we are accustomed in the dictionaries of European languages, since this would involve a great many double or multiple entries and greatly add to the difficulty of finding individual words. This problem and the means of solving it are discussed in detail in Studies, Chap. 4. The arrangement which emerged from this discussion can be summarized as follows:

(1) The words are broken down into fourteen groups, containing respectively words beginning with the following sounds:

(a) vowels
(b) labial plosives (b, (p))
(c) denti-palatal affricate (ç)
(d) dental plosives (t, (d))
(e) velar plosives (k, (x))
(f) post-palatal plosives (k, (g))
(g) l
(h) m
(i) n
(j) r
(k) s
(l) ŝ
(m) y
(n) z

(2) Each of these fourteen groups is divided into sub-groups; in each case the first sub-group contains monosyllables ending in an open vowel; the order of the remainder is determined in the case of the first group (words beginning with vowels) by the first consonant, and, if there is one, the second consonant or failing that the final vowel, if any, and in the case of other groups by the second consonant, and the third consonant, if any, or failing that the final vowel, if any. For purposes of classification these are the only significant sounds; vowels other than initial and final vowels are disregarded except for purposes of arranging the order of the words in a sub-group.

15. Each sub-group is identified by from one to three code letters representing the significant sounds enumerated above, the code letters being as follows:

A, or if one of the significant sounds is post-palatal g or k, E, representing vowels.
B representing labials, b, p, v, (f), (w) but not m.
C representing denti-palatal affricates c, č, (j).
D representing dentals d, d, t but not n.
Č representing velars ġ, k, x but not ň.
G representing post-palatal g, k, (h) but not ň.
L representing l.
M representing m.
N representing n, ň, ņ.
R representing r.
S representing s.
Š representing š.
Y representing y.
Z representing z.

Each sub-group is divided into the following parts:

(1) monosyllables, if any, coded as Mon.
(2) monosyllabic verbs, if any, coded as Mon. V.
(3) disyllables, coded as Dis.
(4) disyllabic verbs, coded as Dis. V.
(5) longer words, coded as Tris.
(6) longer verbs, coded as Tris. V.

16. In order to locate a word in the dictionary:

(1) declensional and conjugational suffixes must be removed;
(2) the part in which it appears in the dictionary must be determined by converting the significant sounds in it into the appropriate code letters, account being taken of the fact whether it is either a verb or not a verb, e.g.:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Word</th>
<th>Code Letters</th>
</tr> </thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>u:</td>
<td>Mon. A</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>u:-</td>
<td>Mon. V. A-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>ak, oğ, u:ğ, ok</td>
<td>Mon. AĞ</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>eg-, ek-, 6g-, ük-</td>
<td>Mon. V. EG-</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>bu:</td>
<td>Mon. BA</td>
</tr> </tbody>
Within each part of a sub-group the words are arranged in the following order, which is designed to make it as easy as possible to locate a word written in any of the various scripts:

1. In Mon. and Mon. V. in the alphabetical order of the vowel, and when two or more words have the same vowel (ö and u, and ö and ü, respectively being regarded as identical since they are not distinguished in these scripts) in the order of the final consonants; thus in Mon. V. AD- the order is ad-, at-, ét-, i:d-, it-, u:d-, ut-, üd-, öt-, üt-.

2. In Dis. and Dis. V.,
   (a) all words ending in a closed syllable precede those ending in an open vowel, thus in Dis. V. ADL- ütül- precedes atla-;
   (b) if two words contain, in addition to the letters represented in the heading, further consonants belonging to different classes, these determine their order; thus in Dis. V. SCD- siştur- precedes saçaš-;
   (c) in other cases, subject to (a) above, the order is determined by the first vowel; thus under Dis. V. SCD- the order is saçač-, sişt-ı-, suçit-, sütlt-, and under Dis. V. ADL- atla:-, edle:-, or, if the vowels are identical, by the order of the consonants following, thus under Dis. V. ADL- ödul, uđul-, oţul-.

3. In Tris. and Tris. V. the same principles are observed, mutatis mutandis.

Most words in the dictionary are preceded by code letters in capitals, only basic words of which the pronunciation is reasonably certain not being preceded by one. These letters have the following meaning:

1. C compound; used when a word is composed of two shorter words, e.g. C içkur ‘belt’, composed of iç and kur. Such words are rare.

2. D Derived; placed before every word other than a compound which is not a basic word, e.g. D evdil-, the Passive form of evdi:-.

3. F Foreign; placed before words which are known to be loan-words, e.g. F a:jun borrowed from Sogdian. Words which are believed to be loan-words are preceded by ?F if definite proof is lacking.

4. PU Pronunciation uncertain; see (6).

5. S Secondary; placed before words which are secondary forms of other words in the list; such words are followed by a reference to the words of which they are the secondary forms.

6. VU Vocalization uncertain. This prefix is used when the vocalization of a word is uncertain but there is no doubt about its consonantal structure, e.g.
PREFACE

VU eteç indicates that this is the most probable pronunciation of the word but that it might be ataç, atiç, atuç, etc. Words are preceded by PU when there is some doubt about the pronunciation of one or more consonants in them whether or not the vocalization is certain.

(7) When a word is known to have existed at an earlier date but was already obsolete by the eighth century so that it is known only from its derivatives the basic word is entered with a preceding asterisk and followed by cross-references to some of the words derived from it, e.g. I *ad-, see adın, adır-.

(8) E Erroneous; unfortunately a few completely non-existent words have found their way into some medieval and modern dictionaries and word-lists owing to misreadings of ancient texts. A small selection of these is included in the list, preceded by E and followed by an explanation, in order to indicate that such words really did not exist and have not merely been overlooked, e.g. E amuç which arises from an erroneous scription of the Arabic word aṣaḥḥ in the manuscript of Kaş.

AUTHORITIES QUOTED, WITH SHORT TITLES

I. EARLY TEXTS

19. All quotations in the paragraphs about individual words are preceded by the name of the language in which they were written and the date of composition expressed in centuries denoted by Roman numerals: vii = eighth century A.D. and so on. When two or more quotations are taken from the same language they are grouped under a single head, possibly with different chronological indications.

A. Türkü

20. Two periods are distinguished:

(i) viii. Several major inscriptions in the Runic alphabet fall under this heading; there is a brief note on the best editions of them in Studies, p. 68, but my own quotations are derived, wherever possible, from a personal examination of the photographs and squeezes of the inscriptions. As a result in one or two cases I have, I think, found better readings of some difficult passages than those in any of the editions; examples will be found under oligurt-, berüki, sin-. In addition to the major inscriptions listed separately below there are some shorter inscriptions, but as they are undated and may be later than viii they are included under the next heading. The major inscriptions are the following:

(a) the funerary inscription of Tofıukuk (this is the customary transcription of the name but it is VU) composed probably in the second, but possibly the third decade of viii; cited as T followed by the number of the line;

(b) the funerary inscription of Kül Tegen, composed in a.D. 732, cited as I followed by the side (E, W, N, S) of the stone and the line on the side;

(c) the funerary inscription of Bilge: Xağan, composed in a.D. 735, cited as II similarly followed;
(d) the funerary inscription of the Külli Cors at Ixc-Xusotu in central Mongolia, roughly contemporary with the preceding, cited as Ix. followed by the line;

(e) the relatively brief inscription at Ongin, cited as Ongin followed by the line.

(2) VIII ff. Under this heading are included texts which may have been composed in VIII, but were possibly, in some cases probably, composed in IX, or perhaps in one or two cases even later. These fall under the following heads:

(a) a few minor inscriptions from Mongolia, of which the most convenient editions are those in the second volume of H. N. Orkun, Eski Türk Yaztlari, 3 volumes and index, Istanbul, 1936-41, (cited as ETY followed by the volume in roman and the page in arabic figures). These are occasionally cited under the names given in that volume followed by a reference to ETY II;

(b) those of the so-called Yeniseian (Yen.) inscriptions which were found in Khakassia and were probably erected by minor Western Türkü chieftains who escaped to Khakassia after the fall of the Türkü empire in the middle of VIII, see Studies, p. 69. The most convenient edition is that in S. Ye. Malov, Yeniseiskaya pis'mennost' tyurkov, Moscow, 1952; they are cited as Mal. followed by the number of the inscription and the line, but my readings sometimes differ from Malov's;

(c) a few inscriptions found at Ayrtam Oy near the town of Talas on the river of the same name and probably datable to IX or X (see Studies, pp. 72 and 256). The texts are almost illiterate and in a deplorable state, and I have quoted them only occasionally, citing them as Talas followed by the number of the inscription and the line;

(d) paper manuscripts in the Runic alphabet. The only substantial one is a book of divination called Irk Bitit, which I cite as Irk B followed by the number of the paragraph and not, as has usually been done, by the page, since the page numbers used do not correspond to those of the actual manuscript. The most convenient edition of the rest, which are rather miscellaneous in character, is in ETY II, but as Orkun's system of references is rather chaotic I have substituted my own, followed by a reference to the page in ETY II. It is commonly believed that these documents can be dated to about IX;

(e) Manichaean (Man.) texts in the Manichaean Syriac or Uygur alphabets and what Prof. A. von Gabain in her Alttürkische Grammatik, Leipzig, 1941, p. 5 (cited as v. G. ATG) called the N-dialect', but which seems in fact, see Studies, p. 118, to be Türkü written in a non-Runic alphabet. The longest and most important of these texts is the 'Confession of Sins' known as the Chuastuanift (more correctly Xwastwanęft). The best manuscript, almost complete, is in the British Museum, and there are other fragments, some of the beginning of the text missing in that manuscript, in Germany. The most convenient edition, with a facsimile of the B.M. manuscript, is still that by A. von Le Coq in JRAS 1911, pp. 279 ff., although the translation is not entirely accurate. I cite it as Chuas. followed by the line of the B.M. manuscript or, in the case of the first part, as Chuas. I followed by the line in von Le Coq's numeration. The other Manichaean Türkü texts which I quote have all been published in the Abhandlungen or Sitzungsberichte of the Academy of Sciences in Berlin (originally the Königliche preussische, later Preussische, and later still Deutsche, Akademie der Wissenschaften). As these publications also contain Manichaean texts in Uyğur and Uyğur-A it is more convenient to list all the publications of Manichaean texts here to avoid additional references in subsequent paragraphs. The main bulk of them is in A. von Le Coq's Türkische Manichaica aus Chotscho I (AKPAW, 1912); II (APAW, 1919); III (APAW, 1922), cited as M I, II, and III followed by the page and line, the last followed by (i), (ii), etc. if the same line number appears more than once on the same page. Others were published in a series called Türkische Turfan texte (cited as TT), edited at one time or another by W. Bang, A. von Gabain, and G. R. Rachmati (later R. R. Arat), which also contains Uyğur Buddhist and Civil texts. Those parts which contain Manichaean texts (mostly not in Manichaean Türkü) are TT II (SPAW, 1929) cited by page and line, and TT III (SPAW, 1930) and TT IX (ADAW, 1958) both in Uyğur and cited by line. Other short Manichaean texts are in A. von Le Coq, Ein manichäisch-ugurisches Fragment aus Idiqut-Schachri (SKPAW, 1908) cited as Man.-uig. Frag. followed by page and line, and W. Bang and A. von Gabain, Ein uigurisches Fragment über den manichäischen Windgott (Ungarische Jahrbücher VIII, pp. 247 ff.), cited as Wind. followed by the line.

B. Uyğur and Uyğur-A (Uyğ. and Uyğ.-A)

The reasons for supposing that two separate, but closely related, Uyğ. dialects existed are stated in Studies, p. 42. There are obvious traces of Uyğ.-A in some Buddhist texts, e.g. those in TT VI and TM IV (although it is stated in the introduction to the latter that the Uyğ.-A forms had been 'corrected' in the transcription so that they are no longer apparent), but such texts do not seem to be entirely homogeneous, so that it is only in the Manichean texts that it seems possible more or less to isolate the two dialects. Three periods can be distinguished:

(1) VIII. The earliest and most substantial Uyğ. inscription in the Runic alphabet is that situated at Şine-usu in Outer Mongolia, which is the funerary monument of an Uyğur Xağan who ruled from A.D. 746 to 759. It is cited as 8U. followed by the side and line on the side.

(2) IX. The second such inscription, only fragments of the Uyğ. text of which still survive, is the funerary memorial at Kara Balgasun of an Uyğur Xağan who probably ruled from A.D. 808 to 821. It is cited as III followed by a letter and line and a reference to ETY II. The third is the short funerary inscription at Suci in Outer Mongolia, probably datable to the first quarter of IX, and cited as Suci followed by the line.

(3) VIII ff., that is, in this case, texts the earliest of which may go back as far as VIII, although the actual manuscripts are probably later, while the latest, apart from the xviii manuscript of the Śwarna-prabhāśa Sūtra, the composition of which was much earlier, is probably a Civil document dated firmly to the second lines 1 to 324, the second lines 1763 to 2160, the rest being unpublished); and the Turkish translation of the Suvarṇaprabhāsasūtra, published by V. V. Radlov and S. Ye. Malov, St. Petersburg, 1913 ff., cited as Suv. followed by the page and line.

(d) Civil (Civ.) texts, that is not religious. These fall into four classes:

(i) Medical texts, probably mere translations of texts in other languages. The main collection is in G. R. Rachmati, Zur Heilkunde der Uiguren I (SPAW, 1930) cited as H I followed by the line, and II (SPAW, 1932) cited as H II followed by the page and line. There are also one or two such texts in TT VII and VIII.

(ii) Astronomical, astrological, magic, and omen texts, published in TT I (SPAW, 1929), cited by the line, TT VII and VIII and USp. Texts of the first two kinds are mainly translated from the Chinese, generally with an Indian background, and are mostly late in the period; the line between unorthodox Buddhist and purely magical texts is indefinite and I may have put some texts on the wrong side of it.

(iii) Commercial and legal documents and (iv) miscellaneous texts. The main collection of these is in USp.; there is one in TT VII, No. 42, a very late text apparently transcribed from an original in the Arabic alphabet, and there are one or two published elsewhere. When quoting the last I have indicated where they may be found.

A good many of the Uyğ, texts listed above have been completely or partially indexed; but no index is available for others, including Suv. which is much the longest, and I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in these unindexed texts.

C. Old Kirğiz (O. Kir.)

22. It is commonly believed that those of the Yeniscian inscriptions which were found not in Khakassia but in Tuva were set up by Kirğiz chieftains in that area and are in the Old Kirğiz language. It has been suggested that they are the oldest monuments in the Runic alphabet and may date back as far as vi, but L. R. Kyzlasov has recently proved by archaeological methods (see Studies, p. 70) that most of them date from ix and x and that some may be even later. I have classified them as ix ff. The most convenient edition is that of Malov mentioned in para. 20 (2) (b), but A. M. Shcherbak has published revised texts of some of them, and some photographs and squeezes are available. I have therefore not always followed Malov’s readings.

D. Xâkâni (Xak.)

23. Xak. is a language closely related both to Türkü and to Uyğ., but sufficiently distinct from both to be regarded as a separate language. It was certainly not directly descended from the latter, indeed it existed side by side with Uyğ. for two or three centuries, and was perhaps not quite directly descended from the former. It is first identified in xi, and there are two Xak. xi texts of major quarter of xiv. The actual date of composition of the remainder is quite unclear; some of the legal and commercial documents are certainly not older than xiii and contain Mongolian, Arabic, and Persian loan-words, but I have taken them into account with suitable precautions, since it is quite impossible to divide these documents neatly into two categories, those anterior and those subsequent to a.d. 1200. These texts can be divided into the following classes:

(a) Christian texts (Chr.). These are likely to be quite early in the period. Only two seem to have survived, the well-known apocryphon about the Magi published in F. W. K. Müller, Uigurica (AKPAW, 1908) pp. 5 ff., cited as U I followed by the page and line, and a fragment published in M III cited by page and line.

(b) Manichaean (Man.) texts in Uyg. and Uyg.-A published in the various works listed in para. 20 (2) (e) above. All are fragmentary and vary greatly in length, though none are very long; in the case of the longer texts it is usually possible to determine whether they are in Man. Türkü, Uyg. or Uyg.-A; when this is impossible they are cited as Uyg. The earliest of these texts probably go back to viii and the latest are unlikely to be much later than ix.

(c) Buddhist (Bud.) texts. These have been published in substantial quantities; the following is a list of those which I have quoted. There are four volumes of Uigurica, the first three edited by F. W. K. Müller, the last by A. von Gabain. U I has already been mentioned under (a); U II (AKPAW, 1911), U III (APAW, 1922), and U IV (APAW, 1931) are cited by page and line. The following volumes of the TT series mentioned in para. 20 (2) (e) contain Buddhist texts: TT IV (SPAW, 1930); TT V (SPAW, 1931); TT VI (SPAW, 1934); TT VII (APAW, 1937); TT VIII (ADAW, 1954, the volume containing the texts in the Brâhmî alphabet), and TT X (ADAW, 1959). Of these VI and X are cited by the line, IV and V by page and line, and VII and VIII by document and line. There is a useful and complete Analytischer Index zu den fünf ersten Stücken der TT (SPAW, 1931) and VI contains a partial and VII, VIII, and X a complete index of words. Another AKPAW volume containing Buddhist texts is F. W. K. Müller, Zwei Pfahlinschriften aus dem Turfanfund (ADAW, 1915), cited as Pfahl. followed by the page and line. W. Radloff, Uigurische Sprachdenkmäler, Leningrad, 1928, cited as USp. followed by document number and line, contains inter alia a number of Buddhist texts. Other publications which I have quoted are the following: Paul Pelliot, La Version ougoure de l’histoire des princes Kalyânâmkara et Pôpamkara, T’oung Pao XV. 2, 1914, cited as PP followed by the page and line; W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Türkî Ceheinemler üzerine Uygurca Parçalar, Türkiyat Memnuası IV, Istanbul, 1934, cited as TM IV followed by the line; Sinasi Tekin, Kuanşî İm Pusar, Erzurum, 1960 (superseding Radloff’s partial edition, St. Petersburg, 1911) cited as Kuan followed by the line; W. Radloff, Tiṣastavustik, ein in türkischer Sprache bearbeitetes buddhistisches Sutra, St. Petersburg, 1910, cited as Tiş, followed by the manuscript page and line; A. von Gabain, Die uigurische Übersetzung der Biographie Hüen-tsong (SPAW, 1935) and Briefe der uigurischen Hüen-tsang-Biographie (SPAW, 1938), both cited as Hüen-ts. followed by the line (the first containing importance. The first is the earliest, and by far the most important, Turkish-Arabic dictionary, the Diwan Lughati’l-Turk of Mahmud al-Kashgari, dating from the third quarter of XI and cited as Kas. The quotations in the form Kas followed by a roman number and an arabic number and sometimes a second arabic number are from the Turkish translation by B. Atalay, Divani Lugat-it-türk Tercumesi, 3 volumes and index, Ankara, 1940–3, since this edition is reasonably accessible, and the index is excellent and comprehensive. The principle which I have followed is to cite the volume and page for main entries and the line as well for quotations from other parts of the book. I have, I hope, included every word which it contains. Atalay’s translation is not wholly satisfactory and I have in every case consulted the facsimile (the printed text contains many minor inaccuracies) and normally quote the original Arabic in my citations, so that the accuracy of the translation can be checked. In a number of cases I have altered Atalay’s readings and spellings. The second major text is the Kutadgu: Bilig of Yusuf Xas Chcib of Balasagun, the earliest surviving purely literary text in any Turkish language, also dating from the third quarter of XI. My quotations are taken from R. R. Arat’s critical edition, Istanbul, 1947, cited as KB followed by the line in that edition. In cases of doubt I have also consulted the facsimiles of the three manuscripts; in some cases my spellings are slightly different from Arat’s. As his index has not yet been published, I cannot guarantee that I have listed every word which occurs in this text, but I have searched it fairly thoroughly. I have classified all the words from these two sources as XI since this date is certain. The Verse Preface of KB is not part of the original text and its language is obviously a little later; quotations from it have therefore been entered under the heading of XII (?) KBVP followed by the line. The Prose Preface is later still and perhaps not really Xak. but a few quotations from it have been entered as XIII (?) KBPP followed by the line.

E. Oguz

24. Kashgari lists a certain number of words in a language which he calls ‘the language of al-Guzziya’ and says that owing to long contact between the people who spoke it and Persian-speakers it had acquired a number of Persian loanwords, often in a rather corrupt form (see üren and turma). It was no doubt the language spoken by the Oguz tribes, who were then living in the neighbourhood of the Aral Sea and had to some extent lost contact with the other Turkish tribes. They were descendants of the Oguz (Tokkuz Oguz etc.) who had played quite an important part in history during VII and VIII and probably even earlier. There is no reason to suppose that during that period they spoke a language markedly different from that of the Türki; but although even by XI the Oguz language had undergone some phonetic decay and accepted a number of loanwords, it retained, and its modern descendants still retain, some characteristics more primitive even than those of Türki, e.g. initial d- in certain words (see para. 14 (1)). Only a few specifically Oguz words are listed in Kas. but they are the earliest surviving specimens of the language.
25. Kāšgārī also cites a number of words in a language which he calls 'the language of Qifcāq', a language which he describes as similar to Öğuz. Several words are mentioned as being common to Kip. and Öğuz but not known in Xak. In XI the Kipčak were west of the Öğuz in southern Russia and Kaş is the earliest authority for their language.

G. Minor eleventh-century dialects

26. Kāšgārī describes a few words as belonging to other contemporary dialects with which he was acquainted; those mentioned most often are the dialects of Argu; Çigil, and Gancak (the last probably not really Turkish, see Studies, p. 132 and the remarks on kendük below). I have included these words with Kāšgārī’s descriptions of them.

II. MEDIEVAL TEXTS

27. The Uyğ. language lingered on for some centuries in Chinese Turkistan (Sinkiang); indeed the latest surviving Bud. Uyğ. manuscript, that of the Suvarṇaprabhāśasūtra already mentioned, was copied in xvm, but the only accessible authority for Uyğ. in this latest state is the Chinese-Uyğ. dictionary (Chin.-Uyğ. Dict.) prepared by a committee of Chinese scholars towards the end of xiv. Some words from this work are included in Radloff’s Wörterbuch and a complete list from another edition was recently published by Prof. L. Ligeti in Un Vocabulaire sino-ouigoure des Ming, le Kao-tch’ang-kouan Yi-chou du Bureau des Traducteurs, Dissertationes Sodalium Instituti Asiae Interioris II, Budapest, 1966. I have included references to this work as Ligeti, followed by the page.

28. The difficulty about classifying most of the remaining medieval texts, which were, with only one or two exceptions, written by or for Moslem Turks, is that in XI the only literary language in which texts have survived, and probably the only literary language then in use, was Xak., but that towards the end of that century or very soon afterwards literary languages emerged which were written in different areas where the spoken languages were rather different from one another, and so very soon began to pursue different courses. There are interesting discussions of the problem of classifying the texts concerned in Philologiae Turcicae Fundamenta I, Wiesbaden, 1959 (cited as Fundamenta) and more particularly in J. Eckmann’s article ‘Das Chwarezmtürkische’ in that volume, and also in the introduction to A. K. Borovkov, Leksika sredneaziatskogo Tefsira XIII—XV vv., Moscow, 1963 (cited as Tef.).

29. What can perhaps be called the direct line of descent, or southern stream, evolved in the area called in the early medieval period Khorasan and the southern part of Mā warā’u’l-nahr (Transoxiana). By xv the literary language used in that area was what is commonly, if inaccurately, called Çağatay (Çağ.), but at any rate three, and probably four, texts have survived which were written between xi and xv (both excluded) in languages intermediate between Xak. and Çağ. The spoken language in this area during this period seems to have been fairly homogeneous with the literary language, except that there was probably a greater concentration of Arabic and Persian, and perhaps from xiii onwards also Mongolian, loan-words in the literary than in the spoken language.

30. Possibly the earliest of these intermediate texts which, since it contains some Mongolian words, cannot be earlier than xiii, is the didactic poem edited by R. R. Arat under the title Atebetü'l-hakayık, Istanbul, 1951, cited as At. followed by the lines.

31. An even earlier date has been suggested for a few Turkish tafsırs, that is interlinear translations of the Koran (mostly bilingual, some trilingual with a Persian translation of the Arabic and a Turkish translation of the Persian) with commentaries and other additional matter. The difficulty in determining the date of these texts and the exact language in which they were composed lies in the fact that the surviving manuscripts of them were all written later, perhaps a good deal later, than the date at which they were composed and have been subjected to a good deal of modernizing by the copyists, later phonetic forms, and even actual words, being substituted for the author's own phonetic forms and words. It is not at all clear whether all, or at any rate all the earlier, bilingual manuscripts go back to a single archetype or whether some are independent translations and compilations, but the latter is the more probable. Borovkov in Tef. has indexed the Turkish vocabulary of one such work, the manuscript of which was found in the town of Karshi. The name of the author, the date of composition, the name of the copyist, and the date of copying are all equally unknown, but the manuscript seems to be later than that of a similar tafsir found in Turkey dated a.d. 1333 (see Tef., p. 4) which is said to have a text close to that of the Karshi manuscript. An examination of the vocabulary shows that it is very heterogeneous. It includes a number of words of great antiquity for some of which, e.g. 2 ap, it is the latest authority. On the other hand, it also includes Arabic, Persian, and even some Mongolian, loan-words, which proves that in its present form it cannot be earlier than xiii, and it even contains different forms of the same word, e.g. aḍrıl-, aɣrıl-, ayrul-, which belong to different periods in the history of the language. It has been suggested that these are evidence that the language used, even if basically Xak., has been heavily influenced by Oğuz and Kip. and that it must therefore have been composed in some northern area and ought to be classified as Xwarazmian (see para. 37). There is not, however, any conclusive evidence that this is so, and there are other possible explanations of the non-Xak. elements in the text. In the circumstances it seems better to regard the language as intermediate between Xak. and Çağ., to date Tef. as xiii(?) and cite it immediately after At.

32. Next in time, and in much the same language, comes the Qiṣaṣu'l-anbiyā of Nāṣiru'd-dīn al-Rabgūzī composed in a.d. 1310. In this case, too, all the surviving manuscripts are later than the work itself and have been subjected to a good deal of modernization. No index of the vocabulary has been compiled, but a number of words from a xix printed edition are cited in Radloff’s Wörterbuch and some of these citations have been included here as xiv Rbg., followed by a reference to Radloff.

33. One Arabic–Turkish vocabulary, the Ḥilyatu’-insān wa ḥalbatu’-lisān of Camālu’-dīn ibnu’l-Muhammad (see Studies, p. 193) is probably of about the same date as Rbg. It contains an extensive list of Arabic words with the Turkish equivalents. The author in his preface says that they are in two languages ‘those of our country and of Turkistan’, and enumerates the phonetic differences between the two. The facts given suggest that the first is an early form of Azer-bayjani and the second a late form of Xak., but, except in a minimum number of cases, it is impossible to decide whether any given word belongs to one of these languages or both. Very probably the great bulk of them are early Azerbay-janı, but as a matter of convenience it is easier to cite this work as xiv Muh.
immediately after Rbg., followed by the page and line of Melioranski’s edition (Mel.) and the page of Kilisli Rif’at’s edition (Rf.); the two editions are not identical and it is likely that the latter, which is based on a single manuscript, contains a good many words added to the author’s text by later copyists.

34. Finally there are many texts in Çağatay, the earliest perhaps late xiv, the great bulk xv or even a little later. The language still survives in a later form as modern Uzbek, and no attempt has ever been made to define the latest date at which Çağ. proper was still in use. Apart from a very extensive literature, three major Çağ.–Persian and Çağ.–Old Osmanli dictionaries have been published which, although they all profess to be primarily dictionaries of the language used by Mīr ʿĀlī Şīr Nawāʾī, probably give a fairly exhaustive list of the Çağ.
vocabulary, excluding the Arabic and Persian, but not the Mongolian, words which it includes. These are, in order of age:

(1) Badāʾi’-u’l-ḥuğat written in Herat by Tālī’-i Harawi during the reign of the Timurid Sultān Ḥusayn (A.D. 1438–1506), a Çağ.–Persian dictionary of which the only (?) surviving manuscript, dated A.H. 1117 (A.D. 1705–6) was published in facsimile with a comprehensive index by A. K. Borovkov, Moscow, 1961.

(2) The anonymous Çağ.–Old Osmanli dictionary commonly known (after the first entry in it) as the Abuska, compiled during the first half of xvi and published by V. de Véliaminof-Zernof as Dictionnaire djalatai-turc, St. Petersburg, 1869.

(3) The Sanglax, a Çağ.–Persian dictionary written by Muḥammad Mahdi Xān and finished in A.H. 1172 or 1173 (roughly A.D. 1759). A facsimile of one of the best manuscripts was published with an introduction and comprehensive

Of these the Sanglax, although the latest, is much the most extensive and best, the author correcting a good many mistakes made in previous dictionaries, including the two mentioned above and others which have not survived. I have cited the first occasionally as Bad. followed by the page, the second more frequently as Vel. followed by the page and the last, almost comprehensively, as San. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

35. Exaggerated importance has been attached by some scholars to Șayx Sulayman Buxari, Luğat-i Çağatay wa Turki ‘Otmâni, Istanbul, A.H. 1298 (A.D. 1881); it contains very little original matter, apart from the mistakes which abound in it (see San., p. 31) but I have occasionally cited it as ȘS. followed by the page.

36. There is in Bokhara an important manuscript of the Muqaddimatı’l-Adab of Mahmûdu’l-ZamâxsARI, a classified Arabic glossary compiled early in XII with an interlinear translation in Turkish (as well as in Persian and Mongolian). The manuscript is dated A.D. 1495 and there is no prima facie reason for supposing that the Turkish translation is much older. The language is therefore likely to be Çağ, and this is confirmed by an examination of the Turkish equivalents in N. Poppe’s index to the Mongolian translation in Mongol’skiı slovar’ Mukaddimat al-Adab, Moscow, 1938. Prof. Borovkov, when he died in 1963, had almost completed an index of the Turkish words in this manuscript, but it is uncertain whether it will now be completed and published. The Turkish entries in Prof. Poppe’s work are not in a convenient form for use in preparing a Turkish dictionary, and are not, according to Prof. Borovkov, wholly accurate. I have not, therefore, quoted this work except occasionally (as Zam.).

37. The history of the northern stream of literary languages is a great deal more complicated. There was undoubtedly in XII a second literary focus further north than the area described in para. 28, centred perhaps in the court of the Xwârazmshâhs who first became important early in XII. The most convenient name for texts belonging to this stream is that recently adopted in such works as the Fundamenta, Xwarazmian (Xwar.), although the literary language which evolved there must also have been in use over a much wider area extending into southern Russia. The spoken languages in this area at this period were markedly different from Xak.; the Turks in Xwarazm and the Aral Sea area were Oğuz and those in southern Russia Kipçak and already in XI Kâşgârî regarded Oğuz and Kip. as separate languages fairly close to one another but different from Xak. Thus, so far as literary works are concerned, it is safe to assume that Xak. was very quickly modified to bring it closer to the local languages.

38. The oldest text from this area, if its colophon is to be relied on, was in fact composed not in Xwârazm but in the Crimea. It is the Qissa-i Yusuf written by a certain Ali, of whom nothing further is known, in A.H. 630 (A.D. 1233). As usual the manuscripts are a good deal later and have been more or less modernized. D. Brockelmann listed a number of words from this work in Ali’s Qissa-i Yusuf, der älteste Vorläufer der osmanischen Literatur (AKPAW, 1917). It has long been recognized that the language is not Osmanlı and I have cited the words quoted in this paper as Xwar. xiii 'Ali followed by the page, but it may well contain more Oğuz elements than most other Xwar. texts.

39. Another text which can be tentatively identified as coming from the Aral Sea area is the enigmatic text sometimes called Oğuz Nāme (see Studies, pp. 48, etc.) written in the Mongolian Official Alphabet and edited by W. Bang and G. R. Rachmati, Die Legende von Oghuz Qaghan (SPAW, 1932). It contains several Mongolian loan-words and so cannot be earlier than xiii, but can hardly be much later. Considering its subject-matter, the language is likely to be much more specifically Oğuz than most other contemporary texts, but the ambiguity of the alphabet used makes it impossible to determine whether it has such a specifically Oğuz trait as initial d-. It is cited as xiii(?) Oğ., followed by the line in the edition mentioned.

40. Next in order of time come five texts which are all more or less solidly dated. The oldest is the Mu'inu'l-murid written in Xwārazm in A.D. 1313 (see Eckmann, op. cit., p. 115), but I have not been in a position to cite any words from it.

41. The next is the Xusraw u Şirin, written by a certain Qūtb at the court of Tini Beg Xan of the Golden Horde in A.D. 1341-2. It has been admirably edited by A. Zajaczkowski, Najstarsza wersja turecka husraw u Şirin, 3 vols., Warsaw, 1958–61, with a facsimile of the only manuscript, a transcription, and a full index excluding the Arabic and Persian loan-words. It is cited as xiv Qūtb followed by the page in Zajaczkowski's index.

42. The third is the Muḥabbat Nāma of Xwarazmi. Two manuscripts of this poem have survived, the second containing a number of verses which did not form part of the original text; see my paper on this poem in CAJ VII. 4, 1962. Unfortunately verses 437 and 440 which state that the poem was composed 'on the banks of the Sir Darya in A.H. 754 (A.D. 1353)', are among the interpolated verses but the date must be approximately correct, since it falls within the reign of Cani Beg Xan of the Golden Horde, during whose reign the poem was composed. It is cited from the recent editions (see Studies, p. 48) as xiv MN followed by the number of the verse.

43. Next there is the Nahcu'l-Farādis written by Maḥmūd ibn 'Alī in Xwārazm, or perhaps Saray on the Volga, sometime before A.D. 1358, the date of the earliest manuscript, but not necessarily much before, since there is fairly good evidence that the author did not die until A.D. 1360. A reproduction of one of the best manuscripts was published in J. Eckmann, Nehci'i'-Faradis I, Ankara, 1956, but unfortunately his index is not yet published.

44. Finally there is the free translation into Turkish of Sa'di's Gulistān. Only one manuscript of this work has survived, and a facsimile of it, with a preface by Prof. F. N. Uzluk, was published by the Türk Dil Kurumu in 1954 under the title Seyfi Seráyi Gúlístan Tercümesi. The translator was a native of Sarai on the Volga, but made his translation at the Mamluk court in Egypt in A.D. 1391.

45. Quite recently there has appeared the first half of an admirable dictionary by E. Fazylov of Qutb, MN, the Nahec-ul-Farádis, and the Gúlístan, with extensive quotations and references, under the title Starouzbekskii yazik. Khorezmiiskie panyatniki XIV veka, Tashkent, 1966. I have used this work extensively to provide references to the Nahec-ul-Farádis, under the title Nahec. followed by the page and line in Eckmann’s facsimile for those words contained in this part of the dictionary; for the rest of the vocabulary I have had to rely on a very inadequate list of words published by Kivámettin in TM IV. I have not thought it necessary to add references to the Gúlístan (Gul.) except very occasionally, since its vocabulary is practically identical with that of the other works mentioned.

46. Apart from the texts mentioned above a few other Xwar. texts have survived and one or two short ones have been published, at any rate in facsimile, but are not cited herein.

47. Seven vocabularies of medieval Kip. have been published, some of them containing some Türkmen (Tkm.) words. The most important, and the only one which is purely Kip., is the Codex Cumanicus, a handbook of the Koman (Kom.) language, a Kip. dialect, in Latin, compiled early in xiv (see Studies, p. 48 and Fundamenta). The text is not entirely homogeneous; the earlier part was compiled for Italian merchants, but it also contains later additions by German missionaries. An index to it was published in K. Grenbech, Komanisches Wörterbuch, Copenhagen, 1942, and is cited as xiv Kom. CCI (for the Italian) and CCG (for the German part); Gr. sometimes followed by the page.

48. The remaining six are all in Arabic, one a list of Turkish words in alphabetical order with Arabic equivalents, the others Arabic handbooks with Turkish equivalents. All these vocabularies have a specified or inferable Egyptian Mamluk background, and it seems clear that basically they are handbooks of the languages spoken by Turkish slaves brought to Egypt from southern Russia, some of them spoke Kip. and others Tkm., an Oğuz dialect. For example, Hou. (see para. 49) seems from internal evidence to have been compiled from oral information collected in the Mamluk possessions in Syria. In some cases an Arabic word is translated by different Kip. and Tkm. words, in others individual words are described as Kip. or Tkm., but in the great majority of cases no such indication is given. The presumption in nearly all cases is that the word is Kip., but there are one or two passages in Id. (see para. 50) which seem to imply the contrary.

49. Until almost today it was generally accepted that the oldest of these vocabularies was the anonymous Arabic–Turkish vocabulary in Leiden manuscript 517, Warner, published in M. T. Houtsma, Ein türkisch-arabisches Glossar, Leiden, 1894, cited herein as xiii Hou. followed by the page and line of the Arabic text. But as this book was actually going to press an article by Barbara Flemming (Hamburg) was published in Der Islam, Band 44, Berlin, June 1968, pp. 226 ff., in which she announced that Houtsma, who purported to publish the exact text of this unique manuscript had converted the date in the colophon into the figures 643, whereas the facsimile published in her article shows quite clearly the words talīta wa arba‘in wa sab‘um‘i‘ya that is (Ṣa‘bān) A.H. 743 equivalent to (January) A.D. 1343. Instead, therefore, of dating back to xiii and being the oldest of these vocabularies, it goes back only to the middle of xiv and comes chronologically between the two vocabularies mentioned in the following paragraphs. This announcement unfortunately appeared too late for it to be possible to correct the numerous references to Hou. in the dictionary.

50. There are two other xiv vocabularies. The Kitābu‘l-idrāk li-lisān‘il-attrāk, the only list of Turkish words with Arabic equivalents, was written in Egypt, probably in A.D. 1313, by Aḥūr‘ul-dīn Abū Ḥayyān Muḥammad ibn Yūsuf, originally a native of Granada. A critical edition was published by A. Caferoglu, Abū Hayyān, Kitāb al-Idrāk li-lisān al-Attrāk, Istanbul, 1931. It is cited as xiv Id. followed by the page in the Arabic text.

51. The Kitāb Buğati‘l-muṣṭaq fi luğati‘l-turk wa‘l-qifṣaq was written by Camāl‘ul-dīn Abū Muḥammad ʿAbdullah al-Turkī probably in the middle of xiv and perhaps also in the Mamluk dominions in Syria. The only manuscript, which is not quite complete, was published with a comprehensive index by A. Zajaczkowski, Manuel arabe de la langue des Turks et des Kiptchaks, Warsaw, I, 1938; II (title in Polish), 1954. It is cited as xiv Bul. followed by the page and line of the printed text in I and the page of the manuscript in II (verbs).

52. There are two xv vocabularies, both surviving in unique manuscripts and dating from early in the century, but it is uncertain which is the older. Al-tuhfatul-zakiya fi luğati‘l-turkiya, an Arabic–Turkish vocabulary in alphabetical order, mainly Kip. with a number of Tkm. words, was written almost certainly in Egypt and before A.D. 1426 (the date of a note on the first page). It was edited with a facsimile, translation, and index in B. Atalay, Etuhfel-üz-zekiyye fil-lügat-it-türkiyye, Istanbul, 1945. It is cited as Tuh. followed by the page and line of the facsimile.

53. Al-qawāninul-kulliya fi-daḥti‘l-luğati‘l-turkiya was compiled by an unknown author in Cairo by cross-questioning Turks living there. The book is undated, but a reference in it to Tamerlane makes it certain that it was written in xv, and probably early in the century. The text was published by Köprülüzade Mehmed Fuad (Prof. F. Köprülü), Istanbul, 1928. It is cited as Kav. followed by the page and line.
54. Quite recently Prof. Zajączkowski published an account of a short Arabic-Kip. vocabulary entitled al-Durratu'l-mu'di'a fi luğati'l-turkiya discovered in Florence, with an extract from the text and an index to the extract, in Rocznik Orientalistyczny XXIX, Pt. i, pp. 39 ff. The work is anonymous and undated but clearly belongs to the first half of xv. It adds little to our knowledge of Kip. but I have quoted a few words from it as xv Dur. followed by the page.

55. The Öğuz language which is conveniently, but not quite accurately, called 'Old Osmanli' (Osm.), since the earliest texts in it date from before the foundation of the Ottoman Empire, is recorded from mid XIII, but the XIII material is scanty. The earliest is a few verses in the works of Mawłānā Calālu'd-din al-Rūmī (A.D. 1207/8-1273/4) and a few verses in those of his son commonly called Sultan Veled. These verses might more properly be classified as Salcuk, but as they are the first stage of a continuous literary tradition it seems more convenient to classify these very early texts and other slightly later texts which are not strictly Osm., like the Kitāb Dede Korkut, which seems to be in a Tkm. language, probably xv., as Osm. so as to avoid an excessively complicated terminology. A good many early works of this kind have been published with partial or complete indices, but it did not seem to me necessary for the purposes of this dictionary to do more than cite under the heading XIV ff. Osm. (since the XIII material is so inconsiderable) those of the words contained in this dictionary which reappear in the Türk Dil Kurumu publication Tümклariyle Tarama Sözlük, 4 vols., Istanbul, 1943-5; Ankara, 1953-7 (TTS I-IV) or as 'Rumi' words in San. A new edition of TTS is now being published, but is not yet sufficiently far advanced to make citation from it very convenient.

THE MODERN LANGUAGES

56. It would not be possible to include in this book all the evidence which could be assembled regarding the survival in modern languages of the early words listed herein without a much greater delay in its publication and a much greater increase in its bulk than would be regarded as advantageous. In any event it is sufficiently obvious to all students of the Turkish languages that common words like at 'a horse' and al- 'to take' still survive almost everywhere to make a detailed proof of the point unnecessary. Nor is it very important, when a basic word is known to survive in some or all modern languages, to know whether its various derivatives survive also. On the other hand, for the reasons stated in para. 8, the subject cannot be entirely neglected, and it is important to include at any rate some references to modern languages. This immediately raises the question how modern languages should be classified and grouped. A good many systems of classification have already been suggested; there are two quite different ones in Fundamenta; but for present purposes it is hardly necessary to use anything more elaborate than a simple geographical system. Even this is open to some objections, since there are no clear-cut geographical lines between the modern descendants of the early languages, and some modern languages descended from different ancient languages have in the course of time developed characteristics which bring them closer to one another than to languages with which they are genetically related. After a good deal of reflection I finally decided upon a sixfold division: north-eastern (NE), south-eastern (SE), north-central (NC), south-central (SC), north-western (NW), and south-western (SW). Of these the NW languages are, genetically speaking, Kip. and the SW Öğuz; the SC and probably SE are, broadly speaking, descended from Xak. but by different lines of descent.

57. In the NE group are included the languages spoken, but until recently not written, in eastern Siberia and adjacent areas. Yakut, however, which has been isolated from the rest so long that it has acquired very special characteristics of its own, is seldom cited, the authority used being E. K. Pekarsky, Slovar' yakutskogo yazyka, St. Petersburg, 1907–30, cited as Pek. The most important authority for the vocabulary of these languages is W. Radloff, Versuch eines Wörterbuches der türk-Dialekte (Opýt slovarya tyurkskikh narechii), 4 vols., St. Petersburg, 1888–1911, cited as R followed by the volume in roman, and the column in arabic numerals, individual languages being mentioned in the abbreviated forms used in that work with the minor alterations of spelling shown in the List of Abbreviations. I have also used the Khakassko-russkii slovar', edited by N. A. Baskakov, Moscow, 1953, cited as Khak. sometimes followed by the page, the Tuvinsko-russkii slovar', edited by A. A. Pal'mbach, Moscow, 1955, cited as Tuv. sometimes followed by the page, and occasionally the modern Russian–Khakas, Russian–Tuvan, and Russian–Altay dictionaries.

58. In the SE group are included the Turkish languages and dialects of Chinese Turkistan and adjacent areas, which have traditionally been called Eastern Türkî and are now called Neo-Uyğur by Soviet and Chinese scholars. These fall into two main groups, the literary language written in Arabic script and the spoken dialects. I have called both Türkî. For the first, citations are from R. B. Shaw, A Sketch of the Turki Language, Calcutta, 1878, cited as Shaw followed by the page, and Burhan Şeĥidi, Uyğurça-Xenuşça-Ruşça Luğat (Uigursko-kitaisko-russkii slovar'), Pekin, 1953, cited as BS followed by the page. A good many words in one dialect, Tarançî, spoken in southern Siberia are included in R, and are cited as Tar. followed by a reference to R. For the rest, mainly dialects spoken in southern Sinkiang. I have used G. Jarring, An Eastern Turki–English Dialect Dictionary, Lund, 1964, cited as Jarring followed by the page. One language in this area is in a class by itself, that of the Sarîg Uyğur in Kansu, the only language which can reasonably be regarded as directly descended from early Uyğ. It is recorded in S. Ye. Malov, Yasyk zheltitkh uigurov, Alma Ata, 1957, cited occasionally as Sarîg Uyğ. followed by the page.

59. In the NC group are included Kirgiz (Kir.) and Kazax (Kzx.), called in R Kara Kirgiz and Kirgiz respectively. Historically Kir. belongs to the same family as the NE languages and Kzx. seems to be a Kip. dialect, but the peoples talking them have lived in close propinquity to one another for so long that they now have many common characteristics. The authorities which I have used principally are, for Kir., K. K. Yudakhin's Kirgizsko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1965, cited as Yud. followed by the page, and for Kzx. Kh. Makhmudov and G. Musabaev, Kazakhsko-russkii slovar', Alma Ata, 1954, and B. N. Shnitnikov's Kazakh-English Dictionary, The Hague 1966, cited as MM and Shnit. respectively followed by the page. I have also occasionally used the equivalent Russian–Kir. and Russian–Kzx. dictionaries, and only occasionally quoted R since the modern authorities seem to be rather fuller and more reliable.

60. There are several modern SC spoken dialects, but the only literary language is Uzbek (Uzb.) for which I have used A. K. Borovkov, Uzbeksko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1959, cited as Bor. followed by the page, and less often the Russian–Uzb. dictionary of 1954. The vocabulary in H. Vambéry's Čagataische Sprachstudien, Leipzig, 1867, is very heterogeneous in character. The bulk of the words in it are classical Çağ. taken, often with some errors, from various oriental authors; the remainder seem to be colloquial xix Uzb. words collected by the author himself, and occasionally cited as Vam. followed by the page.

61. The NW group comprises a rather wide range of languages. Those quoted in R include Kazan Tatar (Kaz.) and three Karaim dialects, those of the Crimea, Lutsk, and Troki (Kar., Krm., L., and T.) but he also uses Krm. for the non-Karaim language spoken in the Crimea which is indistinguishable from Osm., so that the only safe indication that a word is Karaim is that it is given in the Hebrew alphabet. The words quoted from these languages are reproduced with the same abbreviations and the reference in R. For Kar. T. I have occasionally used T. Kowalski, Karaimische Texte im Dialekt von Troki, Cracow, 1929, cited as Kow. followed by the page. For (Kazan) Tatar I have used the Tatarsko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1966, cited as Kaz. or Tat. and for Karakalpak (Kk.) and Nogay (Nog.) I have used the Karakalpaksko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1958 and the Nogaisko-russkii slovar', Moscow, 1963, both edited by N. A. Baskakov and cited by the page, and occasionally the Russian–Kk. and –Nog. dictionaries. For Kumyk (Kum.) there is at present available only the Russko-kumykskii slovar', Moscow, 1960, edited by Z. Z. Bammatov; Bashkir has diverged so far from the rest of the group that I have not taken it into account. No convenient authorities for minor languages like Karaçay and Balkar are at present available. As regards Chuvash (Çuv.) see para. 2.

62. In the SW group are included only three languages, Azerbayjani (Az.), Osm. (including Rep. Turkish), and Tkm. For Az. I have used various authorities published in the Soviet Union, not citing them individually. There are many authorities for Osm., but those which I have generally used are Sir James Redhouse, A Turkish and English Lexicon, in the Constantinople, 1921, reprint, cited as Red. followed by the page; Şayx Sami, Qâmûs-i Türkî, 2 vols., Istanbul, A.H. 1318 (A.D. 1900–1) cited as Sami followed by the page; and occasionally the

A.H. 1306 (A.D. 1888) edition of the Lehce-i Osmaniya, cited as Leh. followed by the page. In noting the survival of words in modern languages I have not included those words which have recently been re-introduced into Rep. Turkish to replace Arabic and Persian loan-words. Some of these are genuine old words which had become obsolete in Osm., others are old loan-words like acun (for a:jun, a word borrowed from Sogdian) and çag 'period' (a medieval loan-word from Mong.), but they have not had a continuous history in Osm.

63. As pointed out in paras. 2 and 12 it is often important in tracing the history of a Turkish word to know whether it became a loan-word in Mongolian and, if so, when, since this often throws light not only on the age of a word but also on its original pronunciation and meaning. The question of such loan-words is discussed at length in Studies, Chap. 11, and it is there suggested that these words were borrowed in three main periods, the first, probably v and vi, during which words were borrowed by a Mongolian-speaking people, possibly the Kitañ, from an 1fr Turkish-speaking tribe, possibly the Tavğaç; the second, probably between viii and xii; and the third during and after the reign of Chinggis. The earliest substantial remains of Mongolian are not, however, earlier than xiii. In citing Mongolian words borrowed from Turkish I have normally used three authorities:

1) E. Haenisch, Wörterbuch zu Manghol un Ni'uca Tobca'an, Leipzig, 1939, which contains a list of the words in the well-known Mong. xiii Secret History (SH), cited as Haenisch followed by the page.

2) The standard, though now somewhat antiquated, dictionary of Classical Mongolian, J. E. Kowalewski, Dictionnaire mongol-russe-français, Kazan, 1841 ff., cited as Kow. followed by the page.

OTHER MODERN AUTHORITIES

64. In addition to the modern authorities quoted above use has been made of the following other modern authorities:

1) A. Çaferoğlu, Uygur Sözligi, 3 parts, Istanbul, 1934–8, a useful list of the words contained in the indices to the texts enumerated in paras. 20 (2) (e) and 21 above and one or two others, cited as Caf.

2) v. G., ATG, see para. 20 (2) (e).

3) G. Doerfer, Türkische und mongolische Elemente im Neupersischen; I Mongolische Elemente, Wiesbaden, 1963; II Türkische Elemente, alif bis tâ, 1965; III ditto jim bis kaf 1967, cited as Doerfer, followed by the volume and the number of the word.
THE ARRANGEMENT OF INDIVIDUAL ENTRIES

65. In paragraphs 4, 5, and 8 some account has been given of the kind of information which is supplied about individual words. There is not a single word regarding which the full range of information is available, and it may therefore be useful to set out here what the full range is and how the various items are arranged. The word may be preceded by a code letter (see paragraph 18). If it is a hapax legomenon (see paragraph 7) it is immediately followed by ‘Hap. leg.’. From this point the order varies slightly. It is sometimes convenient to enter next the original meaning possibly with some remarks on later developments, and if the word is derived it is more logical to record the derivation before the meaning. After this it may be desirable to add some other remarks. If the fact that the word is a loan-word in Mongolian is relevant, this is mentioned next. Information regarding the survival of the word then follows. It cannot be given earlier since there are many instances of words surviving in modern languages, usually NE, not because they have existed continuously in those languages but because they have been reborrowed from Mongolian, perhaps quite recently. Finally, cross-references may be given to other words etymologically related or other words with the same or a similar meaning. The quotations then follow in the following order: Türkü VIII; VIII ff.; VIII ff. Man.; VIII ff. Yen.: Uyğ. VIII; IX; VIII ff. Chr.; Man.-A; Man.; Bud.; Civ.; xiv Chir.-Uyğ. Dict.: O. Kır. IX ff.: Xak. xi (including KB); xiii(?) KBVP; xiii(?) KBPP; At.; Tef.; xiv Rbq., Muh.: Arğu, Çigil, Gancak xi: Çağ. XV ff.: Oğuz xi: Xwar. XIII ‘Ali; xiii(?) Oğ.; xiv Quñb, MN, Nahc.: Kip. xi: Kom. xiv CCI, CCG; Gr.: Kip./Tkmm. XIII Hou.; xiv Id., Bul.; xv Tuh., Kav., Durr.: Osm. xiv ff.

66. In conclusion may I very humbly submit that this book contains a vast number of quotations, translations, and references, and that it is hard to believe... that in such a large flock there are no black sheep? May I plead, as the father of Turkish lexicography did nine centuries ago, that yazma:s atım yağmur yanlışma:s bilge: yanık: ‘the only shot that never misses is the rain, the only scholar who never makes a mistake is the echo’ Kaş. III 379, 20, and present in advance my apologies for these and other shortcomings.

It would not be proper for me to end this preface without expressing my sincere gratitude to the British Academy for their generous contribution towards the cost of producing this volume.

The importance of Suffixes in the formation of the Turkish vocabulary needs no explanation, and nearly every Turkish grammar contains lists of the Suffixes (excluding declenotional and conjugational Suffixes) used to form derived words. There are, for example, extensive lists in v. G., ATG, paras. 44 to 167 and Brockelmann, paras. 20 to 121 and 148 to 176. I included such a list in Studies, pp. 143 ff. and made some corrections and additions to it in Three Notes on Early Turkish, Türk Dili Araştırmaları Yıllığı, 1966, pp. 1 ff. The following is a more complete list of the Suffixes identified in this dictionary. It is divided into five parts, each arranged in a reversed alphabetical order from the last letter backwards. The first two parts contain the Suffixes attached to Nouns (including under this heading all words which are not Verbs) and Verbs respectively to form derived Nouns, and the next two parts the Suffixes attached to Nouns and Verbs respectively to form derived Verbs. The fifth is a list of Noun endings, which are not technically Suffixes, since if they are removed what is left is not a recognizable Turkish word, but are found at the end of a sufficient number of Nouns with similar meanings to suggest that they form a class of some sort. Two of these endings are known Iranian Suffixes, and the words to which they are attached must be Iranian loan-words. Some other endings are not recognizably, or even probably, foreign and seem to go back to a period far beyond our ken, when the Turkish vocabulary was being built up by methods which have long since been forgotten. Between these two classes are some endings which might be, but are not necessarily, foreign. It is noticeable that there is a high proportion of names of animals, insects, and plants in words with these endings.

It should be noted that, although there is commonly supposed to be a clear distinction between Denominal and Deverbal Suffixes, the division is not at all clear cut; several Suffixes which might be regarded as properly Den., like -ci:, -duruk, also occasionally occur as Dev. Suffixes, and the Dev. Suff. -mak occasionally as a Den. Suff.

Scattered through Kaş. are several remarks on the functions of some of these Suffixes; the relevant references are given in the lists below.

The concept of Active, Passive, Transitive, and Intransitive Verbs is a familiar one in all grammars; in Turkish the same terms must necessarily also be applied to N.s and N./A.s, since, for example, Dev. N.A.s like sinuk (sn- -uk) 'broken', köçürme: (köçür- -me:) 'travelling (stove)', and eşidüit (eşid- -üit) 'hearing' can be translated only by Particlpes.

The word 'dominant' applied to a Suff. beginning with a vowel means that this vowel is an integral part of the Suff. and if the word to which it is attached ends in a vowel it is the latter that is elided, e.g. tarmut (tarm(a:)- -ut).

When a Suff. consisting of, or beginning with, a vowel is attached to a Dis. or Dis.V. ending in a consonant the second vowel of the V. is usually, but not always, elided, e.g. adri: (ad(ı)r-ı:), but biriki: (birik-i:).
It should be noted that when a Suff. beginning with -ğ/-g- is attached to a word ending with -n the two sounds are combined as -ŋ-, e.g. yaŋak (yan-ğak) and that when such a Suff. is attached to a word ending in -ğ/-g or -k in both cases the two sounds are combined as -kk-, which became in practice -k-, e.g. baku: (bak-ğu:), tiken (tik-gen), yaku: (yağ-ğu:).

I. NOMINAL SUFFIXES

(a) DENOMINAL (Den. N.)

-çā: about half a dozen words carry this Suff., which is more in the nature of an Equative Case-ending than a Suff. Most are Adv.s., like ançā; but at least one, barçā: is used as a N./A. The Dim. Suff. -çā/-çe:, which did not appear till the medieval period, was borrowed from Pe.

-ke: Dim. Suff., only(?) in sińirke: yipke:, perhaps a crasis of -kiñe:.

-la/-le: very rare; forms Adv.s. in ayla:, tünle:, and perhaps birle:, and Adv.s. in körkle:/körtle: if these are not l.-w.s.

-kiña:/kiñe: Dim. Suff.; very rare.

-ra/-re: forms Loc. Adv.s., e.g. içre: 'inside, within'; very rare.

-ya/-ye: only in berye:, yirya:, prob. Sec. f. of -ra/-re:.

-çî/-çî: forms N.Ag.s; see Kaş II 48; very common.

-nç/-nçî: See -nç.

-ti/-ti: forms Adv.s. from Adj.s., e.g. edgü-ti:; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.

-nti: forms an Ordinal, only in ékkînti: 'second'; perhaps an earlier form of -nç.

-tirti/-túrti:, etc. forms Loc. Adv.s., e.g. içtirti: which is practically syn. w. içre:; very rare.

-ki:/-ki: forms N./A.s describing position in time or space, e.g. aşnu:ki: 'former'; üze:ki: 'sitting on or above'; fairly common in the early period; later the practice grew up of attaching this Suff. only to words in the Loc., e.g. evdeki: 'in the house'.

-du: dubious; only(?) in kardu: which might be a Dev. N.

-ğu/-ğü very rare as a Den. Suff.; forms A.N.s like ènçü:; Conc. N.s like tuzgü:, and Adj.s like bügra:ğü:; also a Dev. Suff.

-ägü/-ägü: dominant; forms Collectives, usually fr. Numerals e.g. üçe:ğü: 'three together', but see also iççe:ğü:, yüzçe:ğü:.

-şü: only(?) in esrinü: syn. w. esri: 'dappled'; also a Dev. Suff., but this word can hardly be a Dev. N./A.

-ru/-rü: Directive Suff. meaning 'towards'; very rare; syn. w. -ğaru/-gerü:.

-ğaru/-gerü: Directive Suff. like -ru/-rü:; hardly to be explained as that Suff. attached to the Dat., since it is attested in dialects earlier than those in which the Dat. Suff. -ka/-ke: became -ğa/-ğe:; rather rare.

-layü/-leyü: meaning 'like', e.g. börileyü: 'like a wolf'; properly Ger. in -u/-ü: fr. a Den. V. in -la/-le:-, but usually the only recorded form of the V. concerned.
SUFFIXES

-č (after vowels) /-ač/-eč/-ič/-iç (after consonants) Dim. Suff.; very rare, esp. the last two.

-ğaç, etc. function obscure; only (?) in odğuç, kuşgaç, and perhaps sügilç; also a Dev. Suff.

-leç certainly Turkish in üçleç; otherwise see List III.

-nč/-inč/-inç/-unç/-ünç the ordinary early Suff. of Ordinals; replaced in the medieval period by -nçt/-nçi:, etc.; see also -ntl:

(F) -t a Sogdian Plur. Suff. found in tégit, tarxat Plurs. of tégin, tarka:n which are prob. very old i.-w.s.

(-ta:ğ/-teğ in words like antağ ‘thus’ is not a Suff. but the Postposition te:g fused w. the stem of ol.)

-liğ/-liğ/-luğ/-lüg forms Poss. N./A.s, see Kaš. I 500; very common.

-siğ/-sig forms N./A.s meaning ‘resembling (something)’ and the like; properly Dev. N./A.s in -ğ/-g fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -si:/-si:-, but the actual V.s are seldom recorded; rare.

-k/ (after vowels and -r) -ak/-ek (the normal forms) /-1k/-ik/-uk/-ük (all rare) usually forms Dim. N.s, but also less restricted words like ortuk; fairly common.

-çak/-çek forms Conc. N.s, usually N.I.s, e.g. ağırçak ‘spindle-whorl’; rare.

-çuk/-çük as correctly stated in Kaš. III 226 forms Dim. N.s, but generally w. a metaphor. sense; e.g. baka: ‘frog’, baka:çuk ‘muscle’; very rare in the early period, later became the commonest Dim. Suff.

-dak/-dek and also (?) -dük/-dük both very rare w. uncertain functions, see bağır'acak, belen'dek, burun'dük; in the last perhaps a crisis of -duruk; bağır'edek might be a Dev. N./A. in -k fr. a Den. V. in -de:- fr. belinç.

-ğa:k/-ge:k usually forms Conc. N.s, e.g. epek, ki diz'ge:k, mü'nüz'ge:k, yanap; very rare, but a common Dev. Suff.

-ğuk dubious, only (?) in cam'ğuk; commoner as a Dev. Suff.

-lik/-lik/-luk/-lük usually forms A.N.s, but quite often Conc. N.s; its various usages are analysed in Kaš. I 505; 510-11.

-mak/-mek forms Conc. N.s, e.g. kögüzmek, but the connection w. the basic N. is sometimes tenuous; very rare, but common as a Dev. Suff.

-muk/-a:muk forms N.s some of which seem to be pejorative, e.g. kara:muk, sola:muk; very rare.

-ňak perhaps Dim.; only (?) in baka:ňak ‘the frog in a horse’s hoof’.

-rak/-rek forms Comparative Adj.s; common.

-duruk/-dürük usually forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. boyunduruk ‘yoke’; rather rare; also a Dev. Suff.

-sa:k/-se:k properly Dev. N./A. fr. a Den. V. in -sa:-/-se:- but the V. itself is sometimes not recorded; very rare attached to basic N.s, e.g. tavarsa:k, less rare attached to Dev. N.s in -ğ, etc., e.g. barışsa:k; see Kaš. I 24; II 55-6.

-suk/-sük function obscure; forms Conc. N.s, e.g. ilersük, bağirsük, sı'arsük and N.I.s, e.g. taň'sük; perhaps Dev. Suff. in -uk/-ük fr. Simulative Den. V.s in -si:-/-si:-.
-çîl/-çîl forms N./A.s of addiction, e.g. iççîl 'sickly' fr. iç 'disease'; rare.

-ğîl/-ğîl (a) attached to Numerals, e.g. üçğîl 'triangular'; (b) otherwise forms N./A.s relating to colour or shape, e.g. başğîl, tartğîl, kırgîl, yîpğîl, yalğîl; rare; also Dev. Suff.

-sîl in arsîl, syn. w. a:r, 'auburn'; prob. a Dev. N./A. in -il fr. a Simulative Den. V. in -si:-; the alternative spelling arsal is improbable; both words are Hap. leg.

-im/-im forms Conc. N.s, only(?) in edrîm, barîm; a common Dev. Suff.

-dam/-dem forms N./A.s meaning 'resembling (something)', e.g. teprîdem 'god-like'; rare.

-a:n/-e:n/-un an obsolete Plur. Suff. (see Kaş, I 76); only(?) in oğlan, eren, boðun, and perhaps özên.

-çîn/-çîn function obscure; only(?) in balîçîn, köçîn/köksîn.

-tûn/-tûn/-dûn/-dun, etc. a Loc. Suff., e.g. taštîn 'outside'; to be distinguished fr. the partially homophonous Abl. Suff.

-ğan/-ge:n forms Conc. N.s w. a more restricted meaning than the basic N.; e.g. arpağan, temûrîn; very rare; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.

-ğun/-a:ğun etc. (also -ge:n in yetîtge:n) forms Collectives, e.g. alkuğun, kada:ğun, keliçûn; very rare; cf. a:ğu/-e:ğû:

-ka:n/ke:n forms an Adj. in teprîken 'devout', and Temporal Adv.s in amtikan, ancaçîncakan; very rare; also an Ending.

(-man)/-men function obscure in (PU) kükmên, közmen; in Türkmen prob. a corruption of Pe. Suff. -mand 'resembling'; also a Dev. Suff.

-şûn. See -çîn.

-iên/-ûn Adj. Suff. in yêliç 'windy'; Dim. Suff. in köliç 'puddle'; also a Dev. Suff.

-da:n/-du:n, etc. forms Conc. N.s only(?) in otûn, ilda:n, and perhaps izdeğ.

-ar/-er (also -rer in ikkirer)/-sar/-ser (after vowels) forms Distributives after Numerals, e.g. birer 'one each', and Adjs of quantity, e.g. azar 'a few each'; very rare; also a Dev. and Conjugational Suff.

-ș/-ış/-uş, etc. function obscure; see ûdûş, bâğış, 2 ba:ş, kökîş; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.

-da:ş/-de:ş forms N.s of Association indicating that two persons have a common possession of some kind, e.g. kada:ş 'kinsman', yerde:ş 'compatriot'; see Kaş, I 406. It has been plausibly suggested that this Suff. is a crasis of the Loc. Suff. -da/-de: and és 'companion'. Rather rare.

-muș/-miş only in altmuş, yêtîmuş 'sixty, seventy', a common Conjugational Suff.

-gey only(?) in küçgey 'violent' fr. kûç 'violence'.

-z demonstrably a Den. N. Suff. only in ékkiz 'twin' fr. ékkiː; also a Dev. Suff. and an Ending.

(-tüz in kûntüz, q.v., is prob. a separate word not a Suff., cf. -ta:ğ.)

-sîz/-sîz/-sûz/-sûz forms Priv. N./A.s connoting the non-possession of a thing, quality, etc.; the opposite of -lîg, etc.; cognate to the Den. V. Suff.

-sîra:, etc.; very common.
(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. N.s)

-\text{a:-e:-i/-u:-ü} taken together fairly common; there is no discoverable rule prescribing which Suff. should be attached to any given V., all being attached to V.s with unrounded and with rounded vowels; when one is attached to a V. ending in a vowel a euphonic -y- is inserted, e.g. \text{ula:yu:}. Usually forms Advs., less often Conjunctions, like \text{ötrü:}; Postposns. like \text{tapa:}; Conc. N.s like \text{opri:}, \text{adri:}; A.N.s like \text{3 kéce:} or Adjs. like \text{egri:}, \text{köni:}.

-\text{ğa:-ge:} forms Adjs., e.g. \text{kışga:}; N./A.s, usually Active, e.g. \text{öge:}, \text{bilge:}; and N.s either Intrans., e.g. \text{köli:ge:} or Pass., e.g. \text{tilge:}; rare and obsolescent; also an Ending.

-\text{ma/-me:} forms Pass. N.s and N./A.s; fairly common; its use as an ordinary Dev. N., N.Ac., etc., prevalent in Osm., did not develop till the medieval period.

-\text{ğma/-gme:} properly a Conjugal Suff.; occasionally forms N.s like \text{taniğma:} ‘riddle’.

-\text{ci/-cl:} forms N.Ag.s, e.g. \text{ota:ci:}, \text{ok1:ci:}; common Den. Suff., very rare as a Dev. Suff.

-\text{ğu:ci/-gü:ci:} properly a Conjugal Suff., see \text{Kaş. II 49}, but occasionally forms N.Ag.s, e.g. \text{ayğu:ci:}, \text{bitigü:ci:}.

-\text{di/-dli:}, etc. a common Conjugal Suff. sometimes used to form Pass. N./A.s, usually attached to Refl. V.s, e.g. \text{üdründi:}; occasionally to basic V.s, e.g. \text{oğdi:}, \text{alka:di:}, \text{söktü:}.

-\text{tr/-tli:} different fr. the foregoing; used to form Advs., e.g. \text{artrı:}, \text{uzatri:}, \text{tüke:ti:}; very rare; also a Den. Suff.

-\text{cu/-çü:} forms Pass. N./As; attached only to Refl. f.s; syn. w. -\text{di:}, etc.; rare.

-\text{du:}, etc. in \text{egdü:}, \text{umdu:}, \text{süktü:} seems to be a Sec. f. of \text{di:}.

-\text{ğu/-gü:} properly a Conjugal Suff. but forms a good many N.s and N./As; rather more than half are N.I.s, e.g. \text{bile:ğü:} ‘whetstone’; most of the remainder are Conc. N.s, e.g. \text{keğdü:} ‘clothing’; the rest are miscellaneous, e.g. \text{oğla:ğü:} ‘gently nurtured’; it appears in crasis in words like \text{ertıp:ü:} and \text{yaku:}.

(-\text{yu:}, etc.; see -\text{a:}, etc.)

-\text{ç} forms ordinary N.Ac.s, N./A.S.s, etc.; attached only to Refl. f.s (and \text{tin-}); prob. a crisis of -\text{iş} etc. which seems not to be attached to Refl. f.s in the early period; common.

-\text{ğac/-geç} only(?) in \text{bösgçe}, a Conc. N., and \text{kısgac}, a N.I. in the early period but commoner later; perhaps merely a Sec. f. of -\text{ğuç}.

-\text{ğuç/-güç} normally forms N.I.s, e.g. \text{brçguç}; rare; also a Den. Suff.

-\text{maç/-meç} forms names of foodstuffs, e.g. \text{tutmaç}; rare.

-\text{t} (only after -\text{r-})/-\text{ut/-üt} dominant; forms N.Ac.s, A.N.s, and Conc. N.s which are usually Active; rare.

-\text{ğut/-güt} usually describes persons, e.g. \text{alpa:ğut}, \text{uruğut}, \text{baya:ğut}, and (etymologically obscure) \text{ura:ğut}; also forms A.N.s, etc. in \text{ögüt}, \text{çapğut}, \text{kızğut}, etc.; very rare and obsolescent.
-ğ/-ıg/-ıg/-uğ/-üg the commonest Dev. Suff.; forms a wide range of Dev. N.s and N./A.s, N.Ac.s, etc.; see Kaş. I 26–7.

-çıg/-çig forms Intrans. and Pass. N./A.s; attached only to Refl. f.s; perhaps a crasis of -çigs/-çigs, in which case the words concerned are N./A.s in -ğ fr. Simulative V.s in -sr/-si:- fr. Dev. N.s in -ç.

-k (after vowels and -r-)/-ak/-ek/-ik/-ik of these -k is rather common, the rest rather rare. Practically syn. w. -ğ; there does not seem any discoverable rule for deciding which Suff. should be used, but on the whole most words ending in -ğ, etc. are N.s and most words ending in -k, etc. are N./A.s, but it also forms A.N.s, e.g. emge:k, k'ilık; Conc. N.s, e.g. kesek, and N.I.s, e.g. bıçak. See Kaş. I 27.

-uk/-ük (ok/-ök) dominant (e.g. in ağruk, esrück); usually forms Intr. or Pass. N./A.s; also a few Pass. N.s, e.g. buyruk, köpük, kölük. Common.

-çak/-çek and -çuk/-çük not direct variants since the first is also attached to V.s containing rounded vowels and the second to V.s containing unrounded vowels; the semantic difference may be the same as that between -ak and -uk. Both form Conc. N.s and N.I.s; rare. Also a Den. Suff.

-dak/-dek it is doubtful whether this is a Dev. as well as a Den. Suff., but ördek looks more like a Dev. N. than a Den. N.

-duk, etc. properly a Conjugational form (Perfect Participle, etc.) but Kaş. I 65 may well be right in defining ağdu:"k as a Dev. N./A. w. this Suff.

-ğa:k/-ge:k usually forms N./A.s connoting habitual or repeated action; also a few Conc. N.s, e.g. içge:k, Kudurğa:k, and N.I.s, e.g. bıçğa:k, tarğa:k w. the same connotation implied; cf. -ğan/-ğen.

-ğuk/-gük forms Conc. N.s and some N.I.s; rare.

-ma:k/-me:k properly the Infinitive Suff., but also used to form a few Conc. N.s, e.g. çakma:k, and, with vocalic assimilation, ügrümük.

-duruk/-dürük forms N.s describing pieces of equipment, e.g. tizildürük; very rare; also a Den. Suff.

-sık/-sik forms N.Ac.s, usually Intrans.; properly the Suff. -k attached to a Simulative V. in -si:-/si:-, but the V.s themselves are not noted; rare.

-yük/-yü"k properly a Conjugational Suff., see v. G. ATG, para. 218, but forms some Intrans. N./A.s; note the -n-y- crasis in bulğa"ñuk, etc.; rare.

-l (after vowels)/-il/-il forms N./A.s usually Intrans. or Pass.; rare.

-ğil/-gili in kızgıl relates, like the Den. Suff., to colour; in bıçgıl forms a N.I.; very rare.

-m/-im/-im-/um/-üm properly describes a single action, e.g. ölüm 'death' (you can only die once) or içim 'a single drink', but sometimes used less precisely as a N.Ac. or Conc. N.; common.

-n/-en-(only in evren, tevren) /-in/-in/-un/-ün partially dominant, see, e.g. uzun, tütün fr. uz"a:, tü"e:, but after vowels -n is more usual; forms N./A.s and Conc. N.s, usually Intrans.; not very common.

-ğan/-ge:n properly a Conjugational form, Present Participle, but, at any rate in Kaş., connoting repeated or habitual action, see Kaş. I 24; II 53; fairly common; cf. -ğa:k/-ge:k; also a Den. Suff. and Ending.
-ğin/-gin (after unrounded vowels) /-ğun/-gün (after rounded vowels) forms N.s and N./A.s, usually Intrans. or Pass.; not very common; -ğun/-gün also a Den. Suff.

-ma:n/-me:n forms N.I.s; very rare; also a Den. Suff.

-ŋ/-añ (in çalaŋ)/-uŋ (inбурүŋ) very rare; the full phonetic range is prob. wider; forms N.s and N./A.s, exact function obscure.

-çaŋ only(?) in ayançaŋ; perhaps connotes habitual action.

-ar/-er/-ir/-ur/-ur/-tır properly an Aor. Participial Suff.; forms a few N.s and N./A.s.

-mur only(?) in yağmur and perhaps çağmur.

-s only(?) in öles; ? Sec. f. of -z.

-ğas only(?) in biçğas; perhaps Sec. f. of -ğać.

-ş/-ış/-uş/-üş there are perhaps two different series here, cf. -k, etc. and -uk/-ük; in some cases a vowel is followed by -ş but in others the -ış, etc. are dominant, e.g. alkış, ülüş, arviş, busuş, fr. alka:-, üle:-, arva:-, busa:-, and, although these words are N.Ac.s, in some cases, e.g. uruş 'hitting one another', the action is reciprocal, in others, e.g. ağış 'rising' it is neutral or at most co-operative; cf. the Dev. V. Suff. -ş-, etc. The connotation of 'a way of (doing something)', prevalent in Osm., is unknown in the early period. Common.

-z/-ız/-iz/-uz/-üz forms N.s and N./A.s, usually Intrans. or Pass., but precise function obscure; it is doubtful whether 1 öz:z and uz should be regarded as Dev. N.s fr. öz: and u: as Bang suggested; very rare and obsolescent.

-duz forms an Intrans. N./A.; only(?) in munduz.

II. VERBAL SUFFIXES

(a) DENOMINAL (Den. V.s)

-a:-/-e:-/-ı:-/-u:-/-ü:- the first two fairly common, the rest rare; attached only to consonants; prob. the oldest Den. V. Suff., forms Intrans. and less often Trans. V.s; see Kağ. I 20.

-da:-/-de:-/-ta:-/-te:- rare and attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms only(?) Trans. V.s.

-ka:-/-ke:- very rare; only(?) in irinçek:- and yarlıka:-, and, in the Refl. f., ağırkan:-; in the last two the -k- is a crasis of -ğk-.

-ırka:-/ırka:-, etc. function obscure, very rare; see taşırka:-, tsoyorka:-, and, in the Refl. f., alpırkan:-, özirken:-; see the Dev. Suff. -ırkan:-.

-la:-/-le:- attached to all vowels and consonants; forms Trans. and Intrans. V.s; when attached to the names of parts of the body means 'to strike on the . . .'; see Kağ. I 22; much the commonest Den. Suff.

-ra:-/-re:- a very rare Sec. f. of -la:-/-le:-, e.g. kekre:-, kökre:-.

-sıra:-/-sire:- forms Priv. Den. V.s meaning 'to be without, or deprived of, something', e.g. ögsire:-; cognate to the Den. N. Suff. -sz, etc.; rare and obsolescent.
-sa/-se:- forms Desid. Den. V.s; fairly common; these V.s form two classes:
(1) those derived fr. basic N.s, e.g. evse:- 'to long for home';
(2) those derived fr. N.Ac.s, e.g. barıgsa:- 'to wish to go'. Also a Dev. Suff., equally common; in Kaş. I 281, 11 it is said that barsa:- is permissible, but barıgsa:- the more usual form. See also I 279 ff.
-ı:- (-ı:-) very rare Sec. f. of -ıa:-/-le:-, e.g. tumlı:-.
-si:-/-si:- forms Simulative Den. V.s, e.g. açıgsi:-; very rare in the basic f.
but see -sin/-sin-; see Kaş. I 282; also a Dev. Suff.
-d- (after vowels)/a:d/-e:d- (after consonants) these V.s are usually Intrans.
and mean 'to be, or become (something)', but occasionally Trans., e.g. köze:d-; as in the Perf. the -d- merged with the Suff. -tı:/-tı: and became -ttı:/-tti:; Kaş. erroneously indexed some of these V.s w. final -t- but it is unlikely that this was the pronunciation except in the Perf.
-it- (? -i:d-) the nature of this Suff. in töği:it- and terit- is obscure.
-k- (only after vowels)/-ık/-ık/-uk/-ük- forms Intrans., and occasionally Pass., V.s; see Kaş. I 20; II 118, 165; rather common.
-ı- forms Intrans. V.s, e.g. tusul-; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
-sın/-sin- the Refl. f. of -si:-/-si:- forming Intrans. Simulative V.s; rare when attached to basic N.s, e.g. uluğsin-, but fairly common when attached to N.S.A.s in -m, etc., e.g. almısın- translated in Kaş. I 20 'to pretend to take, without actually taking'; see also II 202, 259; there are several hybrid forms like begımsın- in which -ım- is inserted between the basic N. and the Suff.
-r- (after vowels) /ar/-er- (the ordinary form after consonants) /-ıır/-ır-(very rare, after Dis. N.s in which the second vowel, -ı/-ı-, is elided, e.g. kurıg- fr. kurığ- forms Intrans. V.s.; see Kaş. II 163; fairly common.
-ğar-/-ger-/-kar- (after -)/(-ker-ıı) normally forms Trans. V.s, occasionally Intrans.; fairly common.
-ğır/-ğır- forms Inchoative V.s meaning 'almost to do (something); to be on the point of doing (something)', (see Kaş. II 200, which relates to Dev. V.s); e.g. tazgır-, tozgır; very rare; also a Dev. Suff.
-ş- identical w. the Dev. Suff. -ş-, etc.; noted only in arkaş-.

(b) DEVERBAL (Dev. V.s)

-sa:-/-se:- forms Desid. V.s; see Kaş. I 21; also a Den. Suff.; fairly common.
-sı:-/-si:- forms Simulative V.s, e.g. emısı:-; very rare; also a Den. Suff.
-d- Trans. and prob. Emphatic in to:d-,-kod-,-yod-,-yüd-.
-t- (after vowels and -r-)/-ıt/-iıt/-uıt/-üıt- the only common Suff. of Caus.
V.s fr. basic V.s ending in vowels; the other forms are rather rare. See Kaş. I 20.
-k- (after vowels and -r-)/-ık/-ık/-uk/-ük- when attached to Intrans. V.s intensifies the meaning, e.g. a:çı- 'to be hungry'; ağık- 'to be famished', see Kaş. I 20; when attached to Trans. V.s forms either Pass. V.s, e.g. sançık-
'to rout'; sançık- 'to be routed'; or Intrans. V.s, e.g. bölık- 'to divide, separate' (Trans.); bölük- 'to separate, part' (Intrans.); rather rare.
-tık/-dük- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, only(?) in buldük-, bastık-.
SUFFIXES

-ṣi:k-/sik-/suk-/sük- forms Emphatic Pass. V.s, e.g. bil- ‘to know’; bilṣi:k- ‘to be well known, notorious’; see Kaṣ. I 21; II 138, 237; rare.
-1-/īl-/īl-/ul-/ūl- the normal Suff. for Pass. V.s; see Kaṣ. I 21; II 138, 237; very common.
-n-/in-/in-/un-/ūn- forms Refl. V.s, which acc. to Kaṣ. had four shades of meaning ‘to do something to oneself, for oneself, or by oneself; or pretend to do something but not actually do it’ (the last practically unknown elsewhere);
it was also used to form Intrans. and sometime Pass. V.s fr. Trans.; see Kaṣ.
I 21, II 168, 254; very common.
-īrkən-/irken- in isirken-, kisirkan-; function obscure; see Den. V.Suff.
-irkə:-
-ɾ- (in one or two V.s, ӯrper-, kurir, yélpir-, etc.)/-čir-/čir- (in tamҷir-kūlcir-)/-gie/-gie- (perhaps occasionally -gie/-gie.; rare) /-sir- (in kūlsir-) all form Inchoative V.s; see the Den. Suff. -gie/-gie-.
(ar-)/-er-/ur-/ür-, attached only to consonants, the first two very rare, the second two fairly common, form Caus. V.s, see Kaṣ. II 87, 199.
-dur-/dūr-/tur-/tür-, attached only to consonants, the commonest Suff.
for forming Caus. V.s; see Kaṣ. I 20; II 197.
-ğur-/ğür- attached only to a limited range of consonants, forms Caus. V.s; see Kaṣ. II 198; rather rare.
-șur-/şür- (occasionally in the Sec. f. -čur-/čür-) is not a primary Suff. but a combination of -ș- and -ur-, the preceding vowel often being elided, e.g.
tap-, tapış-, tapgur-.
-ʂ- (only after vowels)/-tʃ-/tʃ-/uʃ-/uş-/üş- forms Co-operative and Reciprocal V.s which, according to Kaṣ., meant ‘to do (something) together (with a Plur.
Subject); to do (something) in every part (with a Sing. Subject); to do (something) to one another (with a Plur. Subject); to help (someone Dat.) to do (something Acc.); to compete with (birle:, someone) in doing (something Acc.). N. See Kaṣ. I 20; II 113 ff., 225; common.
-uz-/ūz- (dominant, e.g. tüte:-, tütüz-)/-duz-/dūz-/ğuz-/ğüz- form Caus. V.s; obviously cognate to -ur-, etc. (cf. -siz, -sira-:); acc. to Kaṣ. II 87 -dūz- was an Öğüz Suff.; see also II 164; all rare in the early period; became common, and in some languages almost standard, in the later period.

-ğa:/-ge, which was a rare and obsolescent Dev. N. suffix, also appears at the end of a larger number of words which cannot be so explained. Some are pretty certainly not l.-w.s, others, like sırıça: ‘crystal, glass’ prob. are. The list includes one, perhaps significant, pair. avıça: ‘old man’, kurtğa: ‘old woman’, and several names of animals and insects çekürge:, (PU) çınırğa:, torı:ga:, kumurğa:, karga:, kirmıga:, kaşga:, sarıça:; etc.
-vəč/-wač in sanduwa:ç, yala:vač is the Iranian word (and Suff.) wāč ‘voice’.
-diç occurs in tardiç, saviç, sağdiç.
-łaç/-laç in ıkılaç, ijiç, toğıç, kargilaç, sokarlaç, sondilaç, three of them names of birds, is prob., but not demonstrably, foreign.
-ğa:n/-ge:n (also Den. and Dev. Suffs.)/-ka:n/-ke:n occurs at the end of several names of animals: tavuşga:n (a very old word), tayğa:n, sıçga:n, sağızga:n, sıkırkan, etc., and of plants: çibıka:n, tuturka:n, kara:kan, kövürgen, etc.
-ła:n occurs at the end of the names of several animals arsla:n, bakla:n, bula:n, bursla:n, kapla:n, kula:n, sırtla:n ('hyaena', first noted in the medieval period), yila:n, and one title çoğlu:a:n.
-va:r in çığlva:r, yala:var is an Iranian Suff. meaning 'carrying'.
-z occurs at the end of three numerals: ottuz, tokkuz, sekkiz; several names of parts of the human or animal body: ağız, boğuz, büňüz, tız, köküz, köz; and several names of animals and insects: uyaz, topuz, kunduz, etc., as well as miscellaneous words like yıltuz and yultuz. None of these are likely to be l.-w.s.
Preliminary note. There were never many Turkish words consisting of a single vowel, and all of them except a: became obsolete at a very early date. To Kaş., with his background of Arabic philosophy, the whole concept was strange, but he did devote a section, headed rather in-Scutably davatu’l-arba’a, ‘four-letter words’, I 39-40, in the chapter containing two-letter words of which the first is hamza to such words. It originally contained one word hamma alif, four hamza waw, and three hamza ya, but in the surviving MS. some of the second group have had letters added to them. As w is not a genuine Turkish sound, the second group must all have been o:; u:, or ü:. Of the third group one was almost certainly ay, the others probably i: or i:. The only common word, i:, occurs in Kaş. as yi:, its true meaning and nature having already been forgotten.

a: Exclamation, usually vocative in character, occasionally expressing surprise, in the early period usually affixed to the word qualified, later, perhaps under foreign influence, placed before it. The attachment of -al- in metri grata at the end of lines in KB and other poems is a Pe. trick, and perhaps not native Turkish. S.1.2.M.G., but also in contiguous non-Turkish languages. Uyg. viii ff. PU 2 2: Hap. leg.; like many names of fabrics prob. a l.-w., perhaps Chinese; apparently vocalized ay; if i: or i: perhaps some Chinese word like i ‘variegated, rainbow-coloured (clothing)’ (Giles 5, 434). Xak. xi 1: ‘orange-coloured brocade’ (dibüc narançıyıl-lawn) Kaş. I 40.

PU 1 o: Hap. leg.; the word, no doubt hamza waw was inadvertently omitted in the MS. and replaced in the margin by o:ka; presumably taken from the example; it is not clear whether this word is an abbreviation of őğ, which appears as below and elsewhere in the medieval period, or whether the latter is an expanded form, prob. the latter. Preliminary note. The only two basic verbs of this shape are u- and o:-; in various medieval and modern languages more such verbs appeared as the result of the elision of final consonants, e.g. e-fl. (<1 er-) to be'.

u:- there are a few early occurrences of this verb as an ordinary finite verb meaning 'to be' and the like, but it is normally used as an Aux. verb following a verb in the Ger. f. -u:-/u:- or less often -gul:-/gelli: meaning 'to be able'. Even in this sense the word is rare after xı except in the Neg. f. The Pres. Particip. u'g'an, however, used as a N./A. meaning 'God; Almighty' survived rather longer. The later history of the Neg. f. is discussed by Mal. in Usp., pp. 224-5. Briefly the Ger. suff. -u:-/u:- and u:- coalesced to produce -uma/-üme- the 'Impossible' f. of the verb. This stage was reached in Osm. in the early medieval period, but later, probably as the result of a general tendency to 'unround' round vowels, this became -ama/-eme-, producing such forms as Osm. seveme: 'to be unable to love'. It has been suggested that in such forms the -a/-e- is a reduced form of al- which is used as an Aux. verb in the same sense in some modern languages, but this is improbable. It is more plausible that the Osm. Continuous Pres. Suf. -u:or (not subject to phonetic harmony) is a survival of the positive form of u:- Türkü viii ertu: umaduk 'because they could not organize themselves (Hend.)' Mon. AB

1 ap/ep, etc. Reduplicative intensifying prefix, usually placed before N./A/S connoting colour or physical shape. Occasionally at later periods the two words are fused, and the compound thus formed entered in dictts.; in such cases the final consonant of the prefix is sometimes doubled. Other such prefixes are listed below. C.i.a.p.4. Üyíg. viii ff. Bud. for a possible occurrence see 2 ap: Xak. x1 ap/ep 'a strengthening and intensifying particle' (Mar. ta kid ros mudinahâ); to describe something 'particularly good' one says ep edği; and in Öğuz 'for intensively white' ap ak ... up/üp a strengthening particle for [words connoting colours]; hence one says, in Çigil, xavür 'intensively white' Kaz. aba: l apa: ebe/epe: words of this form, connoting various terps of relationship abound in modern Turkish languages with meanings as various as (1) 'ancestor'; (2) 'grandfather'; (3) 'grandmother'; (4) 'father'; (5) 'mother'; (6) 'paternal uncle'; (7) 'paternal aunt'; (8) 'elder brother'; (9) 'elder sister'; (10) (presumably metaph.) 'midwife'. Some, e.g. aba: 'paternal uncle', an abbreviation of Mong. abaga, and other words beginning ab ... etc. are certainly foreign; others, often occurring in only one language group, are of unknown origin. 'The only early forms seem to be Türkü, etc. apa: 'ancestor' and Oğuz ebe: 'mother'. Kağ. does not record the former, but it occurs in KB. In this early period it is often impossible to be sure whether the vowels are back or front and the consonant voiced or unvoiced; the following are the likeliest transcriptions. Türkü viiči: mum apam 'my ancestors' I E 1, II E 3; I E 13, II E 12; eči: mliç apa: miz E I 19; Ongin 1; apa: also occurs as an element in P.N.S., possibly as a title, e.g. apa: tarxan T 34; this phr. occurs in Chinese refeces. to the Türkü and seems to be interpreted as 'commander-in-chief', see Liu Mau-tsai, Die chinesischen Nachrichten zur Geschichte der Ost-Türken, Tu-kieie, index, s.v. A-po-ta-kan: Uyg. viii ff. Man. (the god Zurvan who is) ečesi (sic?) apaslı 'the ancestor' (of all the other gods) M I 22, 3 (ii): Civ. PU 2 apa: 'bear (animal); 'bear' is normally 1 aďiğ, but there is a good deal of folklore, mixed up with an ancestor-cult, about bears in Siberia, and this word is prob. merely 1 apa: used metaph.; survives in NE Kaç., Koib., Sag. There are three early words of this general form; the only one certainly Turkish is uva.; oba: 'clan' is Oğuz and may well be a l.-w., though not demonstrably so; PU opo: 'white cosmetic' is prob. a Chinese l.-w. Ova 'plain' is peculiar to Osm. and seems to be quite a modern word. Oba: 'heap of stones, grave mound' and the like, noted from Kom. XIV CCCI onwards is a l.-w. fr. Mong. obo (Kow. 370, Halod 78).

oba: name of a small social unit, possibly 'clan', but prob. even smaller, 'extended family' and the like; from this the word came to mean 'the dwelling place of such a unit; small encampment or large tent', and thence more generally 'tent, hut', and the like; survives in these later senses in Osm., including Rep. Turkish and Anat. (SDT 108, 141?), and Tkm. (oba) only(?). Oğuz XI obo al-qi gəbila 'clan' (?), an almost word) Kağ. I 86: Çağ. xv ff. obo 'the small tents (xaymahstå) which nomads pitch and in which they reside, when they stop somewhere; and metaphor. the place where they stop' San. 58r. 22: Osm. xiv ff. oba c.i.p., in xiv to xvi it seems to mean 'a small encampment', in a xiv text an ev qawm 'the family living in one tent' is more important than one man, and an oba qawm 'the families living in a small encampment' are more important than an ev qawm; from xvi onwards it seems to mean 'a tent or hut', particularly a large one occupied by more than one family TTS I 533; II 713; III 530; IV 596.

PU evük: hitherto transcribed bük; occurs only in Türki vii ff. Yen. and O. Kir. ix ff. where it is very common. With one dubious exception the only known form is evükmedim in a standard formula in funerary inscriptions. It takes the Dat. and is used in contrast to adril- 'to be separated from', e.g. (xanımka) elmek: evükmedim kuyda: kuçunyikma: adrilım Mal. 8, 1--2, which must mean something like 'I could not stay with my xan and remls; I have been separated from my wife in the women's quarters'. The object of adril- is nearly always a person, wife, son, etc., that of evük- more often an institution, ruler, realm, and the like. Radloff (R IV 1876) is prob. right in suggesting that it should be transcribed evük--; if so it can be taken as a Den. V. in -üiku- (Intrans.) from ev meaning 'to reside, stay'.

PU apam/apan 'if', used with the Conditional mood. The earlier form is fairly common in Uyg., the later is not traceable after xiv. In the early period the -sar form was not always strictly Conditional, and this word perhaps became superfluous and fell into disuse when its usage became more restricted; the word was sometimes used by itself and sometimes followed by birık. Von Le Coq in Turc, 1918, p. 457 stated, without giving a reference, that F. W. K. Müller described this word as an 'Arama-Sogdian ideogram'; this is complete nonsense, apparently based on a misunderstanding of the Sogdian 'ideogram' P and, sometimes followed by ža, which was formerly read ny. Uyg. viii ff. Man. *apam birık ... koştutar 'if he had ceased (to preach, etc.)' TT III 64-5; Bud. *apam birık bu etözümün tıtsermen 'if I renounce this body of mine' San. 614, 1-2; the word is common in San. see TT I 29, note 198: *Civ. apam bir aşakın sisar 'if he breaks one of his legs' TT I 198; apam (by itself) USp. 61, 13; 48, 19, etc.; *apam birık do. 13, 13; 57, 16 etc.: *Xak. xi apan a conjunction (harf) meaning law 'if'; one says *apan sen barsa:sen 'if you go' *Kaj. D opuṣ Dev. N. fr. op- 'rough, uneven ground'; survives only in SW xx Anat. obus,
The word early acquired a number of specific connotations, esp. in its derivatives: (1) 'the interior of the human body' (cf. içe:ğü); (2) 'inner', as opposed to outer, clothing (cf. içtort); (3) 'the interior of a household, esp. a royal household' (cf. içrekli); (4) secret, or mental processes, as opposed to physical. With the 3rd Pers. Suffix in the Dat., Abi., and Loc. it serves as a Postposition meaning 'into, from within, within'. In a few phr., the older of which are listed as main entries, it has been fused with another word to form a compound word. S.i.a.m.l.g., with some variations in final consonant. 1 ece: as pointed out in K. Granbeck, The Turkish System of Kinship, in Studia Orien talia . . . Johni Pedersen dictata, Munks gard, 1953, this word means 'a close male relative younger than one's father and older than oneself', i.e. both 'junior' paternal uncle and 'elder brother'. It soon lost its first meaning, and in the medieval period was displaced almost everywhere by the synonymous Mong. l.-w. qā (aka); it survives, however, in SW xx Anat. in forms like those quoted under ece: Türkü vii. eçim xagan olurtt: 'my (junior) paternal uncle ascended the throne' I E 16, II E 14, a.o.o. in this sense; ini:li: eçili: kilxiirtiklim üçiim 'because the (Chinese) aroused mutual enmity between younger brothers (and nephews) and elder brothers (and uncles)' I E 6, II E 6; a.o.o. of ece: and ini:li in apposition: viii ff. ece: etc. Preliminary note. There are some in modern languages, esp. NE and SW xx Anat., a good many words of the form ACA which are terms of relationship or respect. Some are certainly Mong. loan-words, e.g. ece 'master' and various forms of ece 'father', and others may be. The only certain old Turkish words of this form are ece: ece: and eči:.

ece: both this word and eke: q.v., seem to have meanings straddling the generations (see eçil), this word meaning both 'one's mother's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister' and eke: both 'one's father's younger sister' and 'one's own elder sister'; this would explain why this word survives in residual form in NW and SW attached to say (täq:yg, q.v.) to give the meaning 'maternal aunt' (Osm. teyze). As an independent word survives only (?) in SW xx Anat. ace, ece, ede, lcl SDD 67, 503-5, 780 which all mean, inter alia, 'elder sister'. Xak. xi ece: syn. w. eke: that is al-xwil-ul-kubrâ 'elder sister'; the -ç- was changed from -k- as in Ar. camb from garm and cünbad from gumbad Kaş I 86 (this phonology is absurd; both words with initial g- (so marked in the text) are Pe. l.-w. and the sound change is normal in such cases): Çağ. ece: ('with -ç-') zan-i musinma 'anelderly woman' San. 32v. 4.

F ajun: the Sogdian word "ziw (âjûn) "life, living being", and the like, used as a Buddhist technical term to mean 'state of existence'; one of a series of lives in the process of birth, death, re-incarnation", was also used as a l.-w. with the same meaning in Turkish Bud. and Man. texts. On the adoption of Islam it came to be used as a translation of Ar. al-dunyâ 'this world', as opposed to al-âxirâ 'the next world', when dûnîyâ was not itself used as a l.-w. Survived in Çag. until about XV and, although not traceable in Old Osm., has recently been adopted in Rep. D acın- Preliminary note. In the early period the Refl. f.'s of 1 aç- and aç- would have been homophonous, and it is difficult to decide which form the early occurrences represent, but on balance they all seem to represent the former. If so the earliest occurrence of the latter is in a side-note (prob. in a SW hand) to Kip. x7v ta'llama 'to feel pain' awrórun-(for acın-) Tuh. 9b. 4 with acın- in the margin. On the other hand, at the present day the only survival of the Refl. f. of 1 aç- seems to be NE Sag., 'so acın- (sic) 'to open the mouth'; acın- (with a wide range of phonetic variations) 'to feel pain, grief, anger, or compassion; to grudge; to be pitted,' etc., which s.i.a.m.l.' is clearly the Refl. f. of aç-.

D açın- Refl. f. of 1 aç-; the meaning in some of the passages below is linked with those of 2 açıq, 2 acabığ and, partly, açu-. Uyğ. vii ff. Man. evin barkun açınçlı [kûçûgî people 'who look after and tend the houses and property' (of kings, beg's and notables) Wind. 32–3: Bud. (the ox-herd took him to his house and) açındî 'tended him, or made him comfortable'; (he entrusted him to those in the house, saying) artuk edgı açınçlar 'tend him very well'; bir ay artuk açındî 'he tended him more than a month' PP 67, 6–68, 2: Isığ özünde artukrak açını köyü közedäi tutdu 'you have kept him tending and watching over him more carefully than your own life' U IV 36, 81–3: ökünürmen bilnürmen açınçmen yâ- dinürmen 'I repent, admit, disclose, and publish' (all my misdeeds) Swt. 137, 23: Civ. I 199 (açınçm, açınm:n): KB açınç occurs (l) without an Object, e.g. (may these my good qualities be useful to the king) açınsun 'may he show favour' (and may my pains disappear) 468; (2) governing the Acc., e.g. tâpûsz açğir açınçdim sêlî 'although you were undutiful I honoured you and showed favour to you' 646.

If içan- this word is read four times in TT I, but nowhere else, and translated 'to avoid, take care.' The text is, however, very badly written, and it may well be a misreading of inûn- 'to trust, rely on'; if not, it is perhaps an earlier form of içen- same meaning. Uyğ. viii ff. Civ. (there is a deceitful official in the realm; he impedes your efforts) dîrî kîşîlerke içêngül? (înîtüngül) edremlî kîşîlerîg ayaqcî 'rely on?' highly placed people, and honour virtuous people' TT I 65; in 196–7 and 214–15 the word is in coordination with saklan - 'to protect oneself' instead of aya:-; a.o. 207.

ud, etc. Preliminary note. There are seven basic words in this group of which the original pronunciations can be firmly fixed as ud, otd, ot, oğ, otd, ot, and ud, which are not to keep apart since in the early period -d was pronounced -t. There may also at one time have been a second *ud 'sleep', see 1 u: in some medieval languages uvut has become ut/ud and uğut ut.

ud 'bovine, ox', without reference to sex, not 'bull', which was oğik or buka:, nor 'cow', which was ineg; almost syn. w. sigir. It early became the word for 'ox' in the twelve- animal cycle, and lingered on in this meaning in the west long after it had become obsolete as a common noun. The entries in some Osm. dict., Sami 208 (ot), Red 242 (od), 249 (02), 255 (01) are muddled reminiscences of this. Survives as uy, a common noun, in some NE, SE, and NC languages. Sporadic spellings with -d are errors. See Doerfer II 584. Ugý. viii fl. Man.-A (they kill and destroy) kentii sürügü udug koyanig 'oxen and sheep of their own herd' M I 8, 8; Bud. yerin ud mayakçe uze suvatip 'moistening its ground with ox-dung' U II 29, 6–7 (Suv. 519, 6); amari tinliqlar yunt ud čokar 'some men slaughter horses and cattle' PP 2, 8: o.o. do. 65, 2 and 6; Suv. 341, 22: Civ. at- basically 'to throw, to shoot', with a very wide range of extended and metaphor meanings. (Red. for examples lists 22). There is a wide variation in the cases of the direct and indirect object; the original usage seems to have been to put the object thrown in the Acc., the target (if mentioned) in the Dat., and the weapon (if mentioned) in the Abî; another usage is to put the target in the Acc., and the weapon in the Instr., and another to mention only the weapon in the Acc. In some phr., e.g. taq at- 'of the dawn, to break' there is no stated Object; and in some languages at- has almost become an Aux. V. C.i.a.m.I.g. Üyg. viii fl. êt- (êtl-) has a long semantic history; it originally meant 'to organize, put in order' (a meaning surviving only (?) in NE Tuv. Pal. 576), then 'to ornament, adorn' (cf. êtlî), then 'to create' (as part of an organized plan), then by a gradual process of attenuation simply 'to make', and finally 'to do'. This attenuation occurred chiefly in the Western languages; the Eastern languages, perhaps for the colourfull reason given by Kaq., rather avoided the word and continued to use kil- for 'to make, do.' S.i.a.m.i.g., nearly always for 'to make, do', but in most languages used chiefly to form compound verbs out of foreign, esp. Ar. nouns. The consonant of this verb, unlike that of at-, is -d- before vowels in the SW (Ögûz) languages and this no doubt represents the earliest form. The intervocalic -d- in the NE languages is not significant as it occurs universally. Türkü viii the word is common (over a dozen occurrences) usually in the phr. bodun et- 'to organize a people (group of clans or tribes) into a realm (êdî)', often with an implication of conquering them first; e.g. Südâk bodun êtyên têyin 'saying 'I will organize the Sogdian people'"' (I crossed the Pearl River) IE 39; another phr.

VU u:gg- Hay. leg.; previous editors have read o:gg-, taking the word as connected with 2 og, and translated it 'to give advice', but this is etymologically impossible; it seems in fact to be the basic verb of u:gg- 'sexual passion', q.v.; but the text may be corrupt. I og- the basic connotation is movement through or over; it is both Trans. and Intrans., in the latter case almost always with 'time' of some sort as the Subject. If Trans. it can govern several cases, with different shades of meaning; with the Acc. it usually means 'to cross', e.g. a river, the movement being over rather than through; with the Dat. it means 'to penetrate into (something)'; and with the Abl. (and/or Loc.) 'to pass right through (something)' and come out the other side. There are various metaphor. meanings, e.g. 'to pass over, forgive (sins, etc., Abl.)'; 'to give up, renounce (something)'; and, if Intrans., (of the bowels) 'to be purged'; (of goods) 'to move freely, be easily marketed'. E tdu: a word read in Kaṣ. I 110, 10, and translated 'trouble, distress' by Brockleman with a query and by Atalay without one. It occurs in a verse, Kaṣ.'s translation of which is too free to help, spoken by a man in a lovers' quarrel, ayin: senip udu; engek telim 1du: (or 1du); yumsar katig udu; köprülim şapa: yürükl. The first 1du: is the Gerund of ud- and the second is 1du: 'sand-dune'. The word after telim might be the Gerund of ud- used in a slightly different meaning as a Postponed meaning 'after', or it may be the Gerund of id-, although that verb has no obviously appropriate meaning. In any event it cannot be a noun. It must mean something like 'He said, [I] went following you, and after (?) many sufferings, the hard sand-hank softened, and my heart hastened to you'.

1 idi: properly 'master, owner', but in Moslem texts often the 'Lord' (God). The phonetic history of this word is exceptionally complicated. The original form must have been idli, but the syn. word igeliye-i is so old that its independent existence cannot be completely excluded. It seems, however, more probable that this is merely a Sec. f. with an unusual vowel change in the final. The position is complicated by the existence of a syn. Mong. word ece(n) which is as old as the xin SH (Haenisch 42) and looks like a Turkish loanword. idi could have become ici in Mong., but igeliye could hardly have become ece, so if the two words are identical the word must have been borrowed before the vocalic change took place and later altered to conform with it. It survives in a wide range of Sec. f.s, which are not always easy to identify. NE et R 1 657; 1 1407; Is 1 1411; Khak. c: Bat 334; Tuv. e: Pal. 591: SE. Har. e: R 1 604a; Turk. Iga. Shaw; i ye: Ing. D adûk Dev. Pass. N./A/S. fr. i.d.; lit. 'sent', hence 'sacred' in a more general sense; the phr. iðuk kut 'the sacred favour of heaven' was early adopted as a royal title by some tribes; in course of time its origin was forgotten, and in San. it is spelt iðî kut and given a false etymology (see I 1dû). Survives in various forms, iðîk, iðîk, etc. in NE, NC, and SW xx Anat. SDD 777, 1098. D iðuk N./A/S. fr. iðik: 'sleepy, asleep'. N.o.a.b.; in the medieval period displaced by uykû (a contraction of *uykû: or the like) which occurs in Xwar., Çag., Kom., Kip., and Osm. fr. iii onwards and s.i.a.m.l.g. Not to be confused with oðuk which has exactly the opposite meaning. Uyğ. vii ff. D atka:k Hap. leg.; Dev. N. fr. at- but with no close semantic connection; as according to Brockelmann, para. 52a., this suffix is particularly used for plant names, the second may be the original meaning and the others metaphor. extensions. Xak. xį atka:k al-sufir wa'l-gualcən 'bile, colic'; and a plant (nabt) with yellow flowers is called atka:k; used metaphor. for any face which is yellow with grief (tifirra minə-l-huzn) Kaq. I 118.

D atka:k Dev. N. fr. *atka: -; used to translate the Bud. (and later Man.) technical term tihalpa 'attachment (to this world)'; a l.-w. with the same meaning in Mong. D atkangûluksuz Priv. N./A. fr. an A.N. of atkangû: N.o.a.b. Uyûq. viii ff. Bud. atkangûluksuz youkuq bildiler uktilar 'they knew and understood the nothingness (Sanskrit sannyasî) which is free from attachment (to this world)'. TT VII 462 (and see note thereon); o.o. Swet. 60, 8 (1 bo:q).

D odgûrati: Adverb in -ti; as this Suff. is attached only to N./A.S., the word is presumably der. fr. odgûrak, q.v.; the connotation is that the intellect is aroused, so that the conscious action of the mind etc. is stimulated; the best translation is therefore 'rousingly, vividly'. Hitherto transcribed utgûrati and translated 'completely', but neither form nor meaning are etymologically justified. N.o.a.b. Uyûq. viii ff. Man. (damaged passage) odgûrati belgii[i]lîg kârtûrgû bûrdî 'he demonstrated ... so that it became vividly manifest' M III 26, 11 (i): Bud. D adgûrak Dim. f. of adgûr; properly 'a young stallion'. Survives in NE Alt., Leb. a:ygûrak R I 16, 17; Bar. aygûrak do. 17; NC Kir. a:ygûrak do. 16, in this meaning. Kaş's meaning is otherwise unknown. Xak. xı adgûrak al-a'зам mina'l-wul'da, wa huwa bi-mansûlîl-kâblî lî-l'sîyâth 'the white-footed antelope'; it is in the same relation (to the doc) as the ram to the nannygoat Kaş. I 144.

D odgûrak N./A.S. fr. odgûr-, sometimes used as an Adv., cf. odgûrati, q.v.; the two words appear as alternative readings in the MSS. of TT VI. Basically the meaning must be 'rousing' or the like; applied both to human actions (preaching, etc.) and human sensations (perception, feeling, etc.), in the latter case perhaps best translated 'vividly, convincingly', or the like. Pec. to Uyûq. Hitherto transcribed utgûrak, or more recently odgûrak, and translated 'completely', but these seem to be errors. Uyûq. viii ff. Man. aşırt 'cheek-pouch'; judging by the analogy of aşırt, q.v., there is little doubt that this was the original form of avurt, but this form occurs only in one damaged passage. S.i. m.i.l.g. as avurt, aştir, ort, uurt, and the like. Uyğ. viii ff. Man. (as the poison takes hold) aşırt ‘eru yərūp ‘his cheek-pouches and lips split’ (his chin and throat decay) TT II 16, 14-15: Çağ. xv ff. avurt puri-yı daha mouthful’, in Ar. şid ‘San. 53y. D diştir Dev. N. fr. düür-; cf. aşırt. Not itself recorded but see düştir#, subтиров: These words occur in association with similar deriv. of aşırt, and the two words must have had comparable meanings, this one ‘choice, selection’, and the like.

D aşırt Conc. N. fr. aşırt-; morphologically parallel with aşırt but semantically distinct, although some modern forms of the two words are identical; ‘a grass with divergent (adır-) creeping rhizomes; couch-grass, and the like. Survives in SE Türki aşırt ‘dhub-grass’ Shaw 3, ‘couch-grass’ BS 4; SW Osm. aşırt ‘couch-grass’. The form with c- suggests a reborrowing fr. Mong.; but the word is not traceable as a l.-v. in Mong. See Dorrer II 424. Xak. xi aşırt ‘a plant (nabi) called al til’ ‘Cynodon dactylon’ in Ar. Kas. I 98: Çağ. xv ff. aşırt (so spelt) risa-g i yəyak-i xavq ‘the fibre of a dry plant’, also called qayr (not an ancient word) San. 32r. 25 (quotation): Oğuz xi aşırt al-til; it is a useful (nā'ima) plant; the Turks call it aşırt and the Oğuz change it (-d-) into -y Kas. I 113: Osm. xviii aşırt (spelt) . . . (3) in Rümī the name of a plant which is extremely tender and moist and fattens the cattle that eat it, called in Pe. far bás ‘perennial meadow grass’ San. 57r. 20.

D aşırt Pass. N./A.S. fr. aşırt-; cf. aşırt; basically ‘divided, separated’, hence usually ‘different, other’, and esp. ‘different from, superior to (others)’; in comparisons the word compared with it is in the Acc. in Türki viii ff. Man., the Loc. (unless this is a misreading of the Abl.) in Uyğ. Bud. and the Abl. elsewhere. S.i.a.m.l.g. except SC; in NE aşırt, azır, aşırt; Kkak. azırız; Tuv. aşırt; elsewhere aşırt. (D) otruq ‘island’; too old to be a Dev. N. fr 2 otur- ‘to sit’, as has been suggested, since this form did not evolve fr. olur- until the medieval period; possibly a Den. V. fr. I otur-, with the connotation of something cut off from the mainland. Survives in various forms in one or two NE languages and NW Kaz. utraw. A Dim. f.(?) otrac was current in Kom. and Kip. (Id., Bul., Tuh.), and survives in NW Kas. T., Kow. 442. Most SC, NW, and SW languages use some form of atag/adaq first noted in Muh. and also noted in Kom. and Kip. (Id., Bul., Tuh.), which it is difficult to connect morphologically with this word. Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. otruq ‘island’ PP 33, 7; 36, 6; TT V 26, 91, and 94; Sue 211, 19 and 22 (spelt oturug); Ijen-ts. 1045; Kuan. 20-1 (erqû): Xak. xi otruq al-casira ‘island’ Kas. I 97.

?D idîrîg Hap. leg.; possibly an earlier form of 2 irîg; morphologically a Dev. N. in -g, but there is no trace of *idîr-. Argu: xi idîrîg al-gây-l-xeşir ‘anything hard’; originally irîg Kas. I 102.

D adası/adası N. of Assn. fr. 1 at (adr). Abdülkadir İnan in Türk Dili, Belleten 3rd Series, No 1, pp. 41 ff. argued that the original meaning was 'friend, comrade', and that 'namesake' was a later, secondary meaning. This is etymologically impossible, but the meaning 'comrade' is so prevalent in the early period as to suggest that in this context 1 at meant 'clan (rather than personal) name', so that adası meant primarily 'fellow clansman'; cf. kadas. S.i.a.m.l.ig. See Doerfer II 437. Türkü viii ff. Man. yavlar eşt tuş adası kadas 'evil comrades (Hend.) and kinsmen (Hend.)' Choras. 197-8: Uyg. viii ff. Bud. 1 ok 'arrow'. Owing to the use of arrows for various ritual and ceremonial purposes it came to be used at a very early date in the sense of 'sub-trihe' (and as such forms part of such tribal names as On ok) and also of a lot in casting lots. Ok (so spelt) 'a share of an inheritance', noted in Ker. is, no doubt, another special sense of this word. Later it came, like ok, to mean 'a long piece of wood', usually round in section, like an axle, rolling-pin, and the like, and so tended to be confused with uyq. S.i.a.m.l. See Doerfer II 605-6. common in the early period but seems to survive only in some meanings of NC Kir. o.: SW Osm. āg- 'to rise, evaporate', etc. and Thkm. a:g- (inter alia) 'to climb (over); to overflow; to exceed (a stated period). Kaş. gives a:g- in the same para., a meaning which cannot be connected with 'to rise', is, as such, unrecorded elsewhere, and is entered here as 2 a:g-. ağı: from xI onwards consistently translated 'silk brocade' and the like; earlier contexts suggest the meaning 'treasure', and cf. aşçı; aşlik: 'silk brocade', as the main component of early Turkish treasures, may, however, have been the original meaning. N.o.a.b. The word aş/agi prob. used only in such phr. as aş/agi kurdû 'caterpillar' noted in Osm. xvi TTS II 9 and surviving in xX Anat. SDD 74, 76, 79, 131, 1602 prob. has nothing to do with 'silk' (worm); it seems to be a See. f. of ağ/ü. Cf. barçin. oku:- Preliminary note. The two verbs of this form are obviously distinct but the pronunciation of the second is obscure. Ḍal-kaf′āl-rākhika is Kaş′s term for ‘voiced k’, i.e. ɡ, and it is possible that he meant that the second verb was originally, or alternatively ḍɡl-. This is supported by some later forms.

1 oki:- originally ‘to call out aloud’, hence ‘to summon (someone Acc.)’, ‘to recite or read aloud’, and finally simply ‘to read’ which is the normal modern meaning. S ia mlg except NE. D uğut 'yeast'. Survives in NE Şor R I 1619: SE Türkî Shaw 24; NC Kir.; and, with a slightly different meaning, in SW xx Anat. uğut, uhuğ, uğunt SDD 1415. Xak. xi uğut a word for 'yeast' (xamûr) used in making beer (al-mizz). It is various vegetable drugs (adweya) which are collected and mixed with (specially) grown barley; the whole is then kneaded, cut into pieces the size of a nut and dried. Then wheat and barley are boiled, and the yeast is broken up, and an amount the size of a nut is sprinkled on each (lot of) wheat. The boiled wheat is then folded over and put on a clean thing (say) to ferment for three days. Then it is picked up and put in a jar and left to ferment in it for (another) ten days. Then water is put on it and later strained. This is 'wheat wine' (garabûl-hinta) Kaş. I 50.

PU'S oğat- n.o.a.b.; in Syriac script, so the -g- is certain. In Musen Ö. XXXVIII, p. 45 Bang equated this word with SE Tar. oxtat- 'to awaken' R I 1004, but that is unlikely since the original form of the latter, -ôgatt-, could hardly have lost the -g- so early. It is more likely that it is a Sec. f. of oxt or oxt. Uyg. viii ff. Man. oğat'p keilmis bizlîg ten tînlûq larka evangelyon nom ertîngî nomlap kottupuz 'having come to make people like us recite (or 'understand') it?' you have exhaustively taught the precious doctrine of the gospel' TTV III 62-3: Uyg. viii ff. așıtar-/așıtar- apparently both Intrans. 'to turn, or roll, over' (rare) and Trans. 'to turn, or roll, (something Acc.) over', with some extended meanings like 'to translate (a book etc. Acc.) from (one language Abl.) into (another -çâç-çê);' more or less syn. with evîr-, esp. in the last meaning. The second syllable, always -tars-, excludes the possibility that this is a Caus. f. Also partly syn. with ağaña-, but unlikely to be connected with it etymologically. As regards the velar, Kaş. is prob. right in saying that așıtar- was the original form, though he habitually uses așıtar-, see his remarks on sîgît; the Uyg.
script is too ambiguous to make the Uyg. form certain. D igator- Den. V. fr. *ig; 'to weep'. The phonetic history of this verb is very similar to that of igator, q.v.; the original form was certainly igator-; but a form with prosthetic y-evolved in Uyğ, and was an alternative form in Xak. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually as igla-; iglwa- or a Sec. or metathesized form of one of them, but in NE there are some forms with initial a-or rounded vowels and the SW form ağlwa- (Tkm. a:glwa-) probably emerged as early as xiv. ?F iğar n.o.a.b. v. G. ATG, p. 309 suggests that this is a Sogdian ʒy'r and prob. means 'strong'. Türk. variously ağı or elğe: iğar xağanlıgdık; yeğ kilım 'I made them better than who those had a strong(?) realm and a strong(?) xəgar' I 29, II 24; iğar onluşızda: 'among your strong(?) sons' I SE.

VU? F oğar pec. to Kaş. In spite of the difference in vocalization it seems likely that this is an Ar. l.-w., perhaps received through Pe. where it is also a l.-w. Xák. xii oğar at al-farasu'l-ağarr 'a horse with a white blaze on its forehead'; this word agrees with the Ar. in sound and meaning except that in Ar. the ağıf carries a fatha and in Turkish a dama Kas. I 53; a.o. I 335 (bol).

VU oğur Hap. leg. Although this is described as Oğur, the A.N. oğurluk, q.v., appears in a Xák. verse. It is entered between the Xák. and Oğur translations of uğur and is possibly a special meaning of that word, but there is no obvious semantic connection. Oğur xii oğur al-tıwaq 'exchange', one says atka: oğur aldim 'I received (something) in exchange for the horse' Kaş. I 53.

uğur semantically rather indefinite; seems to connote both 'time' and 'cause'; in some contexts it is hard to say which is uppermost. 'Time' seems to have evolved into 'the right time, an auspicious time', and thence into 'good fortune' the meaning uppermost today in the word and its der. f.s. Very common in the early period, but survives only (?) in SW Az., Osm., Tkm. (and Kirm R I 1019). I 53: Osm. xiv ff. uğur 'direction; objective; journey' noted in several texts TTS I 716-17; II 921; III 722; IV 778, but in some quotations this is not the meaning, e.g. (I) kadırga tamām bir yîl uğura gittü, denizde mâ'dâ desne gormediller 'the galley went out for a period of a whole year, but they saw nothing except the sea'.

akru: 'gently, quietly', and the like; often doubled. From the earliest period a longer form akuru: occurs and fr. xı forms with -n attached. None of the morphological analyses of this word which have been suggested, e.g. in Brockelmann, para. 104, are plausible, and it seems to be a basic word, the form with attached -n being perhaps an Instr. uğra−: Den. V. fr. uğr−, and like it semantically rather indefinite. In Uyğ. it is nearly always constructed with a Ger. in -gall/-gell; and means′ to intend (to do something)′, occasionally with the Dat. with the same meaning; the Ger. uğrayı̄ however seems to mean′ especially, particularly′ (see discussion and further examples in T T V, p. 33, note B86). In Xak. it usually takes the Dat. and means′ to go purposefully (to someone or to do something)′. PUĐ oğurğa: 'backbone'. Almost the only stable elements about this word in modern languages are the meaning, the initial o- and the -r-. The last syllable varies between -ğa and -ka (in the Uyg. text it might be either) but -ğa: is more probable. If so, it might be a Dev. N. fr. oğur-, bearing the same relation morphologically to oğrüş as, say, bilğe: to bilğe. This is the likeliest explanation; but the only early occurrence of the word is in a late Bud. Tantric text, possibly xiii or xiv, and it might be a Turkish l.-w. in Mong. (ogurqa would be the form assumed by oğrug in Mong., cf. uğurha for ukruk) re-borrowed in the Mong. form; there does not, however, appear to be any trace of such a Mong. word. S. i.a.m.l.g. in a wide variety of forms; in some -r-, -n-, -n-, or zero take the place of the first -r- and in others a -r- is inserted after the -r- producing such forms as NC Kır. omurtha, Kız. omurtha, and SW Az. onurğa, Osm. omurğa. PUD ēkekjtôgîk, the first apparently the Man.-A form of the second. A term of affection(?) of uncertain origin. The suggestion in v. G. ATTg, para. 57 that it is a Dim. f. of 1 ŏğg hardly fits the context of its being addressed to a son; the theory that it is a Dev. N. fr. őž- seems semantically more suitable. Uyğ. viii ff. Man.-A yeme ėgi kaçi antâ ēgêk sav sözleyû umâqay 'and his mother and father will not be able to speak such understanding(?) words' (as to enlighten his mind) M I 15, 1-3: Bud. in PP 5, 8; 6, 6; 9, 6; 16, 3 speeches addressed by the king to his son Edgî ėgîlî têqîn begin umrak ėgûkîm and in do. 26, 3 the old man says to the king 'why are you sending your god-like, jewel-like ėgûkînîzînî to the land of death?'. In these contexts it is clearly an alternative word for 'son', but 'sensible, understanding' hardly seems very appropriate.

But a similar spell-up, egirik, is a verb meaning 'whirl, water, circle, pool', and is used in place of TTS 1.231; II 361; III 238; H 285; yeri egirik in Rich., note it for 'Yug yip egirik white pool' Sun. 357. 7.

Degré N.S.A. (Conv. N.) fr. egris, etymologically 'a single act of twisting', but originally 'whirlpool' and the like. Cf. egirik.

There is no reasonable doubt that the meaning of the word in Kip. should be ascribed to 'whirlpool'; the MS. has tyakir (it's last plane, quickened by a pebble), which is not in the list of 'whirlpool' in Kip. II 109; Qaç. xxv ff, Vel. 69 (egirik); eyrum suyun döne döne abis 'a swirling water of flow' (followed by translation, with quotations of of erdem mis-spelt in this way) Vel. 47: eyrum 'the twists and swirls (piç ta sah vele gardisi) which occur in the flow of waters and rivers' Sun. 357. 21 (followed by a reference to the mistake in Vel.).

PU 'eigrum N.o.a. b. syn. with, and perhaps merely a misspelling of ogerum, spell with -s, which often replaces -g- in these texts. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. oigrum suv iip drinking water from the brook' TT VIII I.21; u9, do. 15 (ergum).

Degré N.A. fr. eigrum; see 'joy, joy'; the sound spell -g- in Vel. is a relic of -g- in these texts. Türk. Teri. 3, 6, 7.

Eigrum in Uyg. is a verb meaning 'to surround and encircle (something); to twist, spin (something);' and in its derivations, it is unlikely that this is a Claus. f. of eg- since both are Trans. verbs and this one has no Claus. connotation. It is almost syn. with eigrum, which is occasionally used by itself, but usually in the form of 'egirish. Egirish, meaning 'to surround, encircle (something); to twist, spin (something);' is a verb used in the Turkish language, especially among the Turkic people who thought they were on the point of death (in vain) and would be glad' (their last hours of worldly asceticism) H & E 2 (previously read urug egirik which does not make sense; the -g- has disappeared in a small break in the stone); Vel. 357. 14 (gir, in one instance the meaning is 'to besiege'; this seems to be a simple mis-spelling).

al Preliminary note. There were certainly two ancient words spelt al. It is doubtful whether there was a third, probably al if genuine; see below.

1 ál 'device, method of doing something', originally quite neutral and used for honourable as well as dishonourable devices and methods; later it became imperatorive only and meant specifically 'deceit, guile, dirty trick'.

In the early period usually used in the Hund. al cevis or al altağ. Became a 1.-w. in Pe.; survives only (?) in SW Osm. al: Tkm. al.

1 êl: the basic, original meaning was 'a political unit organized and ruled by an independent ruler'; the most convenient short term in English is 'realm'. In the early texts it usually occurs in association with other political terms, xâgam the ruler of such a realm, bodun its people, törö: the unwritten customary law under which it was administered by the ruler, ulus the geographical area which is occupied and òge: the chief administrative officer of the ruler. From Xak. onwards, but not apparently earlier, it developed some extended meanings. In particular it often seems to mean 'the community, the people of the realm', displacing bodun in this sense. As the Turks became involved in international politics it also began to have an international application and came to mean 'organized international relations' from which the transition to 'peace', one of its modern meanings, was an easy one. It is an open question whether 'courtyard', one of the meanings' given by Kâş, belongs to this word, but it is prob. merely a metaphor. Using meaning literally the 'realm of the owner of the house'. The phr. usually spelt êl kün in two words, which is first noted in KB and seems to mean 'people', has given some trouble. The theory in ïd. that kün here is 1 kün 'sun' is not at all plausible. The most reasonable explanation is that the second syllable is the Collective Suff. -gün and that the spelling should be êl:gün in one word. S.i.a.m.l.g. as êl/êl meaning 'country, province; people, community (esp. one's own people as opposed to foreigners) and, less often, 'peace'. See Doerfer II 653. ol both (1) an indeclinable Demonstrative Adj. 'that' as opposed to bu: 'this'; (2) a declinable Demonstrative Pron. 'that', also used for the 3rd Pers. Pron. 'he, she, it'. As a Pron. it was also used in the early period as the equivalent of the copula 'is, are'. In this last case there are two usages: (a) subject (sometimes implied, not stated), predicate, ol, meaning that the subject is the same as, or has the quality described by, the predicate; (b) subject, ol, meaning that the subject is 'that', often followed by a subordinate clause as in such phr. as āmid ol 'my hope is (that . . . ).' C.i.a.p.a.l.; in most form the still ol, but in one or two the -I has been elided, probably comparatively recently (the only early occurrence, once in Türkü, is almost certainly a scribal error). Such forms are SE Türkü ol; o, o Shaw, B.ş., jarring, and SW Az., Osm. o. In one or two other languages, e.g. SW Tkm. o occurs as a colloquial form, beside the more formal ol. The oblique stem has been from the earliest period an-, and three cases anl: an, anta, antan are listed separately since they are used as Adtr., but there seems to have been an alternative stem In- of which traces are to be found under ança: and aparu; and in the early period the Plur. was olar. In one or two languages, esp. SW Osm. this stem has been converted by false analogy to on-; the only early occurrence is listed under Xak.; and there are sporadic cases of the elimination of -n- in the Plur., e.g. Çağ. alar. Mon. V. AL-al- 'to take', with all the shades of meaning of the English word, 'to seize, collect (a debt), receive, accept', and some others as well, such as 'to take off' (a cap, saddle, etc.), 'to marry' and (as an abbreviation of satfîn al-) 'to buy'.
S.i.a.m.l.g. The word is used in many idioms and compounds in which it is sometimes the second element. When it is the first in expressions like alîp bar- and alîp kêt-
'to take away', and alîp kel- 'to fetch', the two words are often fused and assume forms like appar-, ekkit-, akkel-. Jarring 18-19 lists about 30 phr. beginning with a'up (alîp) in SE Türkî. In compounds in which al- is the second element the meaning largely depends on the form of the first verb. In modern NE and NC languages a Ger. in -p is followed alternatively by al- or bêr-, e.g. satîp al-
'to buy', satîp bêr- 'to sell'. In such cases Pal. says that al- in NE Tuv. connotes action taken in one's own interest or for oneself. But, if the first element is a Ger. in -a/-ç, al-has the same meaning as u- 'to be able'. In such expressions al-, like u-, is usually, but not always, in the Neg. f.; phr. like kele almandi
'he could not come' are common, but phr. like kele aîdî 'he was able to come' occur also.
The date when this idiom evolved is uncertain.
The earliest languages in which it is traceable are Kom. and Çağ., but no examples have been noted in Xwar., Kip., or any earlier language or in the SW languages. It has often been suggested, e.g. in R I 348, that the SW Impossible
f. barama- 'to be unable to go' is a contraction of bara al- but this is an error, the second element is u-; q.v. In the basic meaning 'to take' the object is in the Acc., the source from which it is taken in the Abîl., and the third-party beneficiary, if mentioned, in the Dat.
Türkî viii al- is common, usually 'to capture il-il- Preliminary note. There is some difficulty about the vocalization of these verbs. Kaq. I 169 says that there were two: (1) il-, Aor. ilur, with a back vowel 'to descend'; (2) il-, Aor. iller, with a front vowel (of a thorn) 'to catch (a garment, etc.)'; but the former is spelt with a front vowel in KB (and the Caus. f. illur- survives with front vowels in NC), and the latter with back vowels in Caq.; in the latter language however some meanings are so close to those of al- as to suggest that il- here was a Sec. f. of al-, just as in some languages there is a Sec. f. of ak-, q.v. There is in fact no doubt that the second verb did have a front vowel.

il- 'to descend (from something Abl.).' N.o.a. The suggestion in Kaq. I 169 that elo, q.v., is a Sec. f. of this verb is phonetically impossible. Xak. xi er tagdan kod: ildi: 'the man descended (nazala) from the mountain' (etc.); Aor. ilur, with a dambu on the lam; Inf. ilmak fi'l-muzul Kaq. I 169; attiti iniz ma'nal-faras I 175, 8; o.o. il- (il-1) 'to catch (something, with the hand, a hook, a noose, etc.)' and more commonly in modern languages 'to hang (something Acc., on to something Dat.)' with some extended meanings esp. in SW. S.i.a.m. q.v.; with long vowel in Yakut il- Pek. 912 and Tkcm. il- which may represent the original form. Uyg. viii ff. ol- 'to be, or become, ripe, soft, fully or over-cooked'. Survives only in SW Krim R I 1098 and Osm. It is, however, doubtful whether in these languages it is now realized that this verb is by origin quite different from the much commoner 2 ol- (boil-). Xak. xi et bisip oldi: jubisa'l-lahm hattai taharra'a minal-fabax 'the meat was boiled until it dis-integrated'; also used of a garment when it becomes threadbare and worn out (xaliqqa ta baliya) with long use Kaq. D elçi: N.Ag. fr. 1 ğl. S.i.a.m.lg. The modern meaning is 'ambassador, representative of government in foreign countries', and there is nothing in the early texts to suggest that it ever had any other meaning, although in some Uyg. Civ. contracts it appears as a Proper Name. It seems clear that in the early period it was not a hereditary title, but, like bilge, elğesi: çağus, etc., an appointment normally held by a commoner and not a member of the royal family. Cf. yala vaç. See Doerfer II 656. Uyg. viii ff. Man. the word occurs in two lists of high dignitaries, tegrik en kuncuy (ta)rxan elçiler: elçi bilgiler 'out consorts, tarxan, princes, ambassadors, and counsellors' M III 36, 5 (ii); tarxan kuncuyun te privately tegiktil elçi (el)ğesi elçi bilgiler M III 34, 6-7; Bud. elçiler are mentioned in Kuan. 129-30 in a long list of kinds of people, starting with Buddhhas, Pratyekabuddhas, etc., they come between 'ordinary preachers' (see elğil) and before brahmanas, but the list does not seem to be in any logical order: Civ. one of the parties to the contract in USp. 28 was called Elçi and so were witnesses to do. 19, 9 and 34, 13; an Elçi tılr is mentioned in do. 4, 7: O. D alçak 'gentle, mild, humble' in a laudatory sense; survives in this meaning in NE Alt., Tel. R I 423: NC. Kir.: NW Kaz. and SW Tkm., but in SW Osm. and Kirin, it has (recently?) acquired a pejorative meaning 'low (in stature or character), base, vile'. Prima facie a N./A.S. fr. alçaka-, but this verb is very poorly attested, occurring only in Osm. Red. 184, in a pejorative sense; the Pass. f. elçali- is, however, better attested in recent Osm. dicts. In these circumstances it is possible that alçaka- is a back formation fr. alçak and that the latter is a Den. N. for an earlier *alçak der. fr. alt, but this depends on the question whether the latter, q.v., is an ancient word. See aşak. Xak. xi alçak as-halim'l-zarif 'gentle, mild; graceful, polite' Kaş. Mon. ALT alt as in the cases of 3 al and ast, there is grave doubt whether this is really an independent ancient word. If it was it meant 'the bottom, or lower surface (of something)'. It has been suggested that altín, astín, which is synonymous with it, and üstün, which is often used in antithesis to it, all carry the suffix -dun/-dün/-tun/-tün, etc., which is clearly recognizable in words like ödün and kédin, and that these are cases of *alttin, *asttim, *üsttitn. This is probably correct, but it does involve assuming that alt and ast are in a class by themselves, and different from iç and 2 taş which are the bases of comparable forms içtun and taştun but are also normal N/A.s, since they are used only in suffixed forms. If this is correct, then alçak, q.v., can also be regarded as a crasis of *altçak and derived from this word. The only medieval forms of this word, always in suffixed form, are in Tef. Kom. and Kip. In modern languages there is some confusion between alt and 3 al, but suffixed forms of alt meaning 'below' certainly occur in some NE, NW, and SW languages, and similar forms of ast with the same meaning in SE, NC, and some NW languages. E öLL-t- 'to kill'. This word has been erroneously read in Türkü VIII 3. The photographs, which are clear, show that the actual word in the inscription is öLM:is, but there is a small crack in the stone between ô and t which has been taken for an l. The text reads (you abandoned your xañB:n and surrendered) (to the Chinese). Because you surrendered teyiri: öLM:is erînc 'Heaven, no doubt, abandoned you'.

D alta:- Den. V. fr. 1 a, l.; although 1 a, l. and altar: q.v. were originally neutral in meaning and only later became pejorative, alta:- always meant 'to deceive, trick, cheat (someone)', with a few extended meanings like 'to soothe (a child), to console' in some modern languages. D ildur:-, iltur- Preliminary note. The same inconsistencies of vocalization occur in these two verbs as occur in il:- and Ill:-, but there is no clear evidence of the vocalization of the first in KB and the Çağ. form of the second looks like a Sec. f. of altitude-. The Infin. of the first is apparently spelt:-mak, later corrected to -mek in the MS. of Kaš.

?s alîq syn. w. afîq, q.v., and perhaps a Sec. f. of it. In this meaning survives only (?) in SW xx Anat. aluk (of a man) 'bad' SDD 98. It is, however, possible that a word meaning 'crazy, stupid, mad', and the like, NE several dialects alîq R I 373; Tel. alu: do. 387; Khak. alîq and SW Osm. alîk is a survival of this word. See Doerfer II 535. Kip., Oğuz xi alîq al-raddî 'min hull sayî' 'bad' of anything Kaş. I 64; also occurs in I 384, 6 in a verse (repeated in I 85, 5 with yavuz instead of alîk (the men who reckoned it good fortune to have a guest have all disappeared) kalûd: alîq oyuk körüp evni: yikâ: baqgyllağîn têdä ra'atâv-l-hâyal naqadî axtibyatahâm kayfâ yanzi: alâyyî 'but those who, when they see a mirage, strike their tents in order that (a guest) may not lodge with them, have remained'; alîq is not specifically translated but must have meant 'wicked' or the like: Xwär. xiv alîq 'weak, inadequate' Qubr 8: Kip. al-câbân 'cowardly' (opposite to 'brave' alp) alîq Hou. 26, 4: xiv alu: al-'âçiz 'on şarimmi' 'weaker than (or inferior to) his adversary'; bu: bundan alu: dur 'this is inferior ('âçiz) to that'; and for a'çaz 'more inferior' they say alurak ld. 22: Osm. xiv alu: 'weak, inferior', often in contrast to ulu 'great' or yêg 'better', common in xiv and xv and occurs in xvi TTS I 23; II 31; III 18; IV 19.

?d alîk/âluk; it is an open question how many etymologically different words of these forms there are and which of them can be explained as Pass. Dev. N./A.s fr. al-. This is obviously true of the word in KB, and possibly true of Kaş's Oğuz meaning of alik. But it is less obviously true of Kaş's meaning of aluk, and rather improbable of the Kip. meaning. It is difficult to connect NC Kir. alîk 'peak, summit' R I 372 with any earlier meaning, but SW xx Anat. alîk/âluk retains the second early Osm. meaning and has other meanings like 'driftwood carried away by a flood' which clearly represent a Dev. N. fr. al. See Doerfer II 547. (O. Kir. ix ff. the word read aluk in Mal. 44, 2 is corrected to alp in Shcherbak's revised text): Xák. xi KB tükel bilse bolmaz kiklîklarîn ýême alsa bolmaz aliklîkîn 'it is impossible (for a servant) to understand completely (his master's) character,

D ı 2 ulag: a technical term for a horse used for carrying goods or riding, more particularly a horse for hire and a post horse. The specific meaning seems to be that it is one of a string of horses available for hire or use, and it may originally have meant a string of horses rather than a single animal, but if so this meaning became obsolete very early. It is therefore prob. a Dev. N. fr. ula:-, etymologically identical with ılığ, but with a specialized meaning. An early l.-w. in Mong. as ula’a ulag (Haenisch 162, Kow. 394) ‘posthorse, relay horse’. ulag ‘big, great’, physically and metaphor., including such usages as ‘grandfather’, eldest (son). S ilki See 1 yilki.

D alkığ 'wide, broad'; well established in Uyg., where it occurs only in the Hend. kép alkığ, otherwise known only in NE in a curious variety of forms; Karagas alkı (sic); Khak., Koib. alkıg; Şor alığı, aldiği. R I 373, etc.; Bas. 23; Tuv. alğığ Pal. 55.

Prima facie N./A.S. fr. alık-; the semantic connection is tenuous, but cf. alkuğ: There is a NE Khak., Tuv. verb alğı 'to expand, become broader', but this can hardly be as old as Uyg., and may well be a late form of alık- or even a back-formation fr. alkığ. Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A (you will live in that country) képın alkığın mũgusuzun 'at your ease (Hend.), and carefree' M III 30, 5-6 (i); Bud. (of a kingdom) Sanskrit vipulam 'broad, wide' kép alkığ TT VIII C 1; 'of property' və$tìrma ditto do. D 33; o.o. do. G 35; K 4; kép alkığ (of heaven, earth, a palace, etc.) is common in TT VI 07, 241, 243, etc.; a.o. X 26.

D olgun N./A.S. fr. 1 ol-; 'ripe'. Survives only in SW Osm. and xx Anat. ulğun/ulikun SDD 1416-17. The word is not fully vocalized in Kāṣ. and the Ar. translation corrupt, but its identity is certain. Xak. xı seçərəli olgün konak (mis-spelt koyak) qalla rəb (?) həbbətli-əčərs o' the quantity(?) of grains of millet was small' Kāṣ. III 167, 7 (the second word must be a Noun as the third is a Gen. but rəb (not fully vocalized) does not look right); n.m.e.

D alkıç Dev. N. fr. alkin-; 'coming to an end, annihilation', and the like. N.o.a.b., but cf. alkıçız. The -u- is no doubt euphonic before a consonantal Suff. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. alkıçuka tegi burxan uruğı üzülmez 'the seed (i.e. succession) of Buddhas will be unbroken until the end of time' TT VI 205; səzəlik köpülümüz alkıçuka tegi üzül-zün 'may our doubts be utterly dispelled' do. 380-1.

D alkış N.Ac. fr. alka-; 'praise'; originally in the sense of praising God, later also in ordinary human relations, where 'blessing' is sometimes the better translation. S.i.a.m.lg., except SC where it has been displaced by the Mong. l.-w. maktoğ. Türkü viii ff. yaruk ay teprikçe: alkısta: 'in praise of the bright moon god' Toy. fr. 2-3 (ETY II 176): Man. alkısmüz otğümüz 'our prayers and prayers' Chuas. 216; başqal alkış çaxşapat 'fasting, praise, the commandments (l.-w.)' do. 330; a.o. do. 206 (alikan-): Uyg. viii ff. D 2 elüg P.N./A. fr. I elü; originally lit. 'having a realm', it soon came to mean 'king', perhaps at first to supply a word with the meaning for translations of Bud. and Man. scriptures. In Uyğ. Bud. it is often combined, or alternates, with xan. q.v. It then came to be spelt, and perhaps pronounced, elüg with a singl -I-, and perhaps, at some uncertain later date, elüg. In Persian it suffered further changes, e.g. to ilek, but this was prob. never really a Turkish word. Apart from the refences below, the only survivals seem to be in NC Kir. eldı 'populated'; eldı (1) 'democrat'; (2) in phr. calpi eldı 'embracing all the people', and possibly ilek or ilek ilek 'neighbour'. D almalik A.N. (Conc. N.) fr. alma: 'apple orchard'. Survives in its literal meaning in some NW and SW languages, but used as a place-name over a much wider area. Does not occur in any Turkish text before xvi, and then only as a place-name, but occurs as a place-name in a Sogdian document found at Mount Mug in Fergana which can be firmly dated to the first quarter of viii. It is unfortunately impossible to determine which of the various places with this name is referred to, but it must have been within reasonable distance of Fergana, and the name must be a legacy from the period when the Western Türkü ruled in this area. Türkü viii in a much damaged Sogdian document, ii; relating to the issue of various kinds of military equipment, quivers, weapons, etc. it is stated (l. 4) that 'dmdtuki ywlo m rz 'the assistant to the governor of Almaluk' (Sogdian d (Hebrew lamed) here used with its original value l) received five weapons of an uncertain kind, M. iler- acc. to Kaš. 'to be dimly visible'. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as ilere- 'to appear, become clearly visible' (Kov. 300, Hallod 67). NE Tel. iler- with the latter meaning, R I 1480, might be either a survival or a re-borrowing fr. Mong. Cf. iler-. olur- (olor-) 'to sit', with various extended meanings. The phonetics of this word are complicated. The Caus. f. olgurt- q.v. suggests that the original form was oloːgur-, but there is no other trace of such a word. The only form in Uyg. and earlier languages is olur-, but this form survives only in NE Tuv.

olur- and Yakut olur- Pek. 1819. In Yak. there are two forms olur- and oltur- which are best explained as very early examples of the Turkish habit of dis-similating -l- to -d- (cf. the pronunciation alda for allah in some modern languages). The form oltur- still survives in some modern languages, but in others the -l- has been assimilated to -tt- (some NE languages), -d- (other NE languages) or -t- (all SW languages and some others). The verb originally meant 'to sit', possibly with a distinction of meaning between 'to sit down on (something Dat.)' and 'to be seated on (something Loc.).' The special application to rulers seems to have been pec. to the early period. Another shade of meaning is (of nomads) 'to settle down, reside' (in a particular place); in some languages only of temporary settlement, permanent settlement being described by yat-. In some modern languages used as an Auxiliary Verb, preceded by a Ger. in -p, meaning 'to do (something) habitually, continuously, or frequently', but sometimes with a very tenuous meaning. Türkî VIII olur- is very common in three distinct meanings; (1) 'to sit down (for a rest) I E 27, II E 22; T 51–2 (udː-); (2) 'to take (one's) seat on the throne' xaːgan olurtum 'I took my seat as xaːgan I S 9, II N 7; a.o. ulus has a curious history; originally it meant 'country' in a geographical sense, as opposed to 1 él (q.v.) with its political implications, but it began to be associated with the names of cities, and by x1 in some languages it meant 'city' rather than 'country'. An early l.-w. in Mong., where it became ulus to comply with Mong. phonetics and acquired a political rather than a geographical sense. It was originally used for the largest political unit known, the Mong. empire (see XIII below), and when this was split into four between the four sons of Chingis it was used for each of these four parts, e.g. 'the ulus of Çağatay'. Then, since the Mongols thought more in terms of peoples than of territories, it came to mean 'a confederation of peoples (él)', the peoples being divided into 'tribes' (aymag), the tribes into 'clans' (boy), and these into families (uruğ). All these words, except perhaps the third, were Turkish and the second, fourth, and fifth have a continuous history in Turkish, but the first had so completely lost its original meaning that when it was reintroduced into Turkish it appeared in its Mong. form ulus (not ulus) and with its Mong. meaning. Ulus seems to survive only in NW Kar. L. R 1697; in all other language groups (except NC where it is obsolete) it is ulus 'nation, people, tribe', and the like. Türkü viii (in the list of foreign powers represented at Kül Tegin's funeral) Buxarak ulus 'the country of the Bokhariots' (prob. in Inner Mongolia, not Bokhara itself, see S. G. F amaç a very early 1.-w. fr. Pe., no doubt acquired with the plough, when the Turks first became agriculturalists. Persian âmâc meant primarily ‘plough’, thence ‘a heap of earth thrown up by the plough’, thence ‘such a heap, perhaps further enlarged, used as an archery target’, and thence ‘a furlong, one twenty-fourth of a parasang’, a suitable distance for an archery range. Kaṣ. noted two of these meanings, San., who recognized the word as Pe., gave only one Turkish meaning. It is listed in SE Türkçe amaç ‘plough’ *Shaw 14; SC Sart ditto R I 646; Uzb. omaç ‘plough’ (obsolete) Bor. 304 and in SW Tkm. omaç ‘plough’ (obsolete). It existed in SW Osm. fr. an early period (see below), but
Red. marked it as Pe. and so did Sam. 54, describing it as a ‘superfluous’ word for ‘target’.
It has, however, been adopted in Rep. Turkish meaning (physically) ‘a target’ and (metaph.) ‘aim, objective’ on the ground that it means ‘target’ in SW Anat. (amaç SDD 98;

Bazin, 'Noms de la chèvre' en turc et en mongol, in Studia Altaica, Fest- schrift für Nikolaus Poppe, Wiesbaden, 1957, pp. 28 ff., both of which contain minor errors, e.g. that the word originally had an initial y- which rests on no better evidence than a mis-spelling in the Vienna MS. of the KB. Survives apparently only in SW xx Anat. imla/Ime SDD 780, 790, both of which seem to mean some kind of wild goat. Türkü viii passages in I N 8 and II E 31 have hitherto been read Amğa: Kurğan kiliplar and Amğt: (error for Amğa:; the stone is chipped here) Kurğan kişädükda: 'after spending the winter at Amğa Kurğan'. Preliminary note. Apart from m there were three nasal sounds in early Turkish: dental n, which has survived in all languages, guttural ng, which has survived in some languages, been weakened to n in others and in a few, under the influence of Mong. (see Studies, p. 220), strengthened to ñg, yk, and palatal ñ, which was already becoming obsolete in VIII and has now evolved into y; or a combination of the two, usually meta-thesized, see Clauson, 'The Turkish Y and Related Sounds' in Studia Altaica, Festschrift für Nikolaus Poppe, Wiesbaden, 1957. There is some difficulty in texts in Ar. script in distinguishing between ng and ng, but the latter combination seems to occur only when -g- is the first letter of a suffix, and in Kaş. words containing ng are placed in special sections for words containing that sound. Some authorities, e.g. Id., tried to overcome the difficulty by representing ng by n with a diacritical mark, usually three subscribed dots, but this mark is often lacking in the surviving MSS.; in others ng sometimes seems to be used to represent ñ.

1 ēp an Adjectival Prefix forming a quasi-Superlative. S.i.a.m.l.g. as ēq occasionally ēp. 2 ēq survives only in SW xix Os'm but even there described in Sam. 143 as 'obsolete'. Most authorities translate 'cheek', but as it is often associated with colours, 'complexion', the Osm. meaning, may sometimes be intended; yaqāsk, the alternative word for 'cheek' seems originally to have meant specifically 'cheek-bone'. on-, etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. lists three verbs of this form op- 'to fade', ün- 'to rise', and ün- 'to hollow out', but not on- 'to prosper' which was well established at an earlier date, and still survives, though in most languages as ûg-. Two more verbs appeared in the medieval period, ün- 'to be stubborn' and ün- 'to lie in wait'. It is not always easy in texts to decide which verb is intended and sometimes whether words like ûpar and onions are conjugational forms of one of these verbs or a longer verb like ûpar- or a Pronoun (see D onu).

Inl: 'younger brother'. C.i.a.p.a.l., but in SW Osm. largely displaced by such phr. as kiçük kardeş. Cf. ecli: See Doerfer II 674. Türkii xiiinin and inlisi: are common in I and II; a collective Plur. in -gün occurs three times; in I S 1 the spelling is clearly inyinism, in II N 1 the stone seems to be damaged beyond repair at this point, and Radloff's 'retouched' squeeze simply reproduces the word fr. VU ona: an Adv., pec. to Uyğ. and discussed at length in TT V, p. 32, note B 80. It seems to mean both (1) 'precisely, exactly' and (2) 'very soon'. It seems to be the origin of a modern word ana (with other forms ene, anav) used as an Excl. meaning 'here, here you are', and an Adv. meaning 'merely, simply' which occurs in some NE and NW languages, NC Kxz., and in a wide range of forms in SW XX Anat. SDD 99, 100, 101, 104, 532, 534, 537, 791, 793. The Kxz. phr. ana mina suggests a connection with ol and v. G. ATG, para. 190 adopts this suggestion, but the oblique stem of ol is consistently an- (with some traces of in-) in Uyğ. Cf. onan. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Ratnaraşı aṭih aṣari ona aṭi bu eru 'now this is the teacher named Ratnaraşı' Swt. 573, 20; I. Brahmadati elglnm [eslunčili] ona inškin kozunun turur 'King Brahmadattas' tale cr. a. D onu: pec. to Xak.(?) and space: and apparently the Acc. of ol used as a sort of Excl., but irregular since the oblique stem of ol in Xak. is an-. Possibly a later form of ona: q.v. Xak. xi one says onu: meaning daka 'that' and munu: meaning hadda 'this' fil-işāra tilāl-aymmin 'a perform one thing from another' Kaq. öpli: 'other than (something Abl.), different'; when doubled, öpli: öpli: means 'various, different kinds of'; Kaq. quotes an alternative form ögün, no doubt Secondary, which appears in some medieval texts, and was the origin of ögün/ögün, q.v. Survives, with minor phonetic variations in most modern language groups, not SW, in SE, SC meaning 'variegated, parti-coloured', perhaps owing to a supposed connection with 2 öpl. D ança: Equative form of ol; properly 'as much as that', but normally in the early period hardly more than 'thus'. There is also, in the early period, a Sec. f. beginning with 1- of this and other cognate words (ançip, anarû, etc.). This is usually transcribed încâ, a spelling which does occur in TT VIII, but as there is also a spelling inçâ in those texts, and as the word survives in this form in NE Tuv., it is likely that the original form was inçâ: and that încâ is merely one of several examples of the tendency of 1- to move into a front position (cf. 1-9, 1-3, etc.). S.i.a.m.l.g. as ança and the like. As inçâ: always means 'thus', some editors of early texts have tended to 'correct' words meaning 'thus' to încâ even when ança: is clearly written. See Doerfer II 560. Türüki viii ança: 'thus' is common in I and II and occurs in T 2, 6, 8, 10 (ûçes-), etc.; Ongin 8, 11; IX 26, 23; it is generally used near the end of a sentence or para. to summarize briefly what has gone before or, less often, what follows, e.g. an: körîp ança: biliq 'when you see it (the memorial tablet) know thus' (i.e. what has been said in the preceding sentences) I 9, 13: viii ff. the concluding sentence of each para. in IlbB begins ança: biliq (or biliqler) 'know thus' (i.e. as follows), the omen is good or bad); ança: têmiş 'this is what he said' Tayyiik III 2r. 4 and 11; v 2 (ETY II 179): Man. nêçe yûglûrî ertî ança kusar yarsîyor ertî 'the more he ran the more he vomited (Hend.)' D ançi: N.Ag. fr. 4 an (3 ep) 'hunter'. Rare in Uyg., but clearly so spelt. A l.-w. in Mong. as ançi (Kow. 18, also ançi); Haltod 4). It is not clear whether the same word in some NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx. is a survival or reborrowing fr. Mong. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. käylkiç ançi tuzakç boltumuz erser 'if we have been hunters of stags and wild game or trapper' U II 84, 9-10; TT IV 8, 56-7.

?F ançi: n.o.a.b., but cf. ançula:-; used only in the Hend. ögdir ançu which seems to mean 'gift' or 'reward'. In U III 92, in a note on 32, 16 it is suggested that it is the Chinese phr. an chu 'to live in peace' (Giles 44, 2, 527); the semantic connection is not convincing, but the word is prob. a Chinese l.-w. Uyg. VIII ff. Bud. ali yarlikazun teprî baxsi nomlumî nom etmînin ögdiri ançun 'may the sacred preacher deign to receive a reward (or gift in return?) for the precious doctrine which he has preached' U III 122, 14-16; (go and kill the six-tusked elephant; if you do this) saça uluğ törlüg ögûr ançu bar 'there are various great rewards (or gifts?) for you' do. 58, 8-10.

S inciça/inçu: See ançu:

1 inciç: n.o.a.b.; poorly attested in the early period, the only occurrences being in Uyg. Civ. documents of which one certainly, and the other two probably, date from the Mong. period. There is, however, no good reason for supposing that this is a l.-w. The only early (xvn) Mong. word of comparable form is inç 'a maid-servant given to a bride at her marriage' (Hoa-nisch 83, there connected with Chinese ying, same meaning (Giles 13, 343)) which is no doubt the original form of inciça 'dowry' (Kow. 280, Haltod 62). This latter is a Mong. l.-w. in various NE languages and NC Kir., Kzx. There is no real semantic connection between these Mong. words and inciç; which at any rate in the medieval period had much the same meaning as English 'fief', that is 'a piece of land granted by a ruler on condition of the performance of certain services', and, by extension, 'the person(s) bound to perform such services'. Whether this was the original meaning it is hard to say. It has been plausibly suggested that this is the word which appears in the Stael-Holstein scroll, a Khotanese Saka document dated A.D. 925, in the forms 'gîuva and inçî, meaning apparently 'the chief tribe in a confederation', that is the ruler's own tribe (see Asia Major, n.s., vol. II (1951), p. 17; vol. IV (1954), pp. 90 ff.). The original meaning may have been nearer to 'family or clan property', and in particular 'a chief's own property'. See Doerfer II 670. Uyg. VIII ff. 1 ir (or ir?) 'song'. The prosthetic y- in Uyg. and Xak. is clearly secondary, as in other words like irak, since nearly all modern languages which convert verbs into nouns, e.g. as in NE Khak. Tuv. ir; NC Kzx. ir; NW KumyK. Nog. yir; SW Osm. ir; only NC Kir., NW Kk. have ir; in some modern languages also 'tune, epic, folk-tale', etc. See iran… Uyg. viii ff. or: a word used to describe the colour of an animal's coat, the meaning varying from language to language. Survives in NE Tel. or 'greyish' R I 1047; NC Kzx. or 'dark reddish brown' R I 1047; MM 202. Two words ending in -z have been entered here, since no such words with this meaning have been noted elsewhere. See ar. Xak. xi or at faras baynal-aşgar wa1-kumayt 'a horse with a coat

1 or 'height, high, high ground'; N/A. homophonous with 1 or- but perhaps not connected since the exact connotation is slightly different. Not noted before the medieval period, but older since it is the basis of the word 'high ground'.

2 or- 'to deceive, trick'. The suggestion in Hüen-ts. Briefe, p. 29, note 1867 of a connection with ara: is unconvincing; some remote connection with 1 a:1 is possible.

1 er- 'to be' (something, somewhere, etc.), necessarily accompanied by a Predicate; it cannot be used by itself to mean 'to exist' (for which see bar), but is often used as an Aux. V. after Participles, etc. of other verbs. In the earliest period it was conjugated completely, but the -r- began to be elided fairly early, and after that the tenses formed by attaching suffixes with initial vowels became obsolete and were replaced by the corresponding tenses of bol-jol- in some languages and tur- in others. However, some tenses, usually without the -r-, s.i.a.m.lg. The unusual very early Gerunds(?) erkü, erken, erling are listed separately.

Türkü viii; vii ff including Man. and Yen. er-, to be', and as Aux. V., is very common: Uyg. viii; vii ff. Man.-A, Man., Bud., Civ. ditto; in TT VIII spelt er- or, less often, er- never er- e:ser (for erseer) occurs once: Xak. xii olanda: erli: koda kâna 'he was thus' Kaş. I dio: and also erdi: mã kâna 'it was not' yoruk erdi: and also dêyûl li: Mel. 19, 16; Rif. 99 (the alternative translations suggest that, in Muh.'s terminology, er- was the form used in Turkistan, i.e. late Xak. and - the form used in 'our country', i.e. early Az.), it is added that most tenses of 'to be' are supplied by bol-, er-/-: surviving only in some: Çağ. xv ff. some individual forms, erdî, etc., are listed in Vel. 50-4 and translated idi, etc.; 'to be' is not listed as a Verb in San., but various forms like erdî, ıdî are listed among the Nouns: Xwar. xii er: Ali 27, é do. 35: xii (1) er- 'to be', and as Aux. V. is common in Oğ.: xiv er- is common, Qub 51; MM 66, etc. Kom. xiv er- and more often e- occurs in CGI, CCG.
in various forms listed at length in Gr. 89-90: Kip. xiii idi: (partially conjugated) is a Turkish word (lafza) corresponding to kähna Hou. 50, 11 ff.: xiv (under ‘alif alone’) idi: means both arsala ‘to send’ (see 1-d)- and kähna; in the first sense it is conjugated (mutatsarrafı), but in the second only in the Perf. (al-mudi) Id. 7: xv there are three forms (lub) for kähna 6:dl, idli, -dli: Kov. 27, 19 (with examples); idli, etc. are common in Tuh.

2 ěr- ‘to reach, arrive; to meet(?).’ This verb is well established in several medieval languages and survives in SW Osm., but in the early period is so overshadowed by I er- that it is difficult to identify, particularly since its Perf. can hardly be distinguished from that of ert-. In the early period there is a phr. er-bar- which seems to mean ‘to behave in an independent, unsubordinate fashion,’ and can hardly be an idiocy of I er-. In this case it may be the basis of erk, etc.; the same meaning seems to survive in NW Nog. erű (A Nog. Inlin. form) ‘freedom, liberty,’ and NW Kk. er- ‘to follow; to meet; to amuse oneself’ is also connected. See I ěrtır-, I ěrış-. Dis. ARA ara: (?:ara) difficult to pin down grammatically; there does not seem to be any record of it as the subject of a sentence or in other contexts in which it could be regarded as an ordinary Noun. In the early period it is used only as a Postposn. meaning 'between (two places), among (a number of people)', and the like; but Kağ. translates it as a Noun and does not describe it as a harf. Later it seems to be used almost only in the Loc., either with a preceding Pron. Adj., e.g. bu arada 'in this locality', or with a Poss. Suff. e.g. aramızda 'among us' or with a 3rd Pers. Poss. Suff. and a preceding Noun, e.g. oğbu yarın arada 'in the middle of this light'. Normally used of space, less often of time. S.i.a.m.l.g. PU irbīs 'the Siberian panther, Felis irbis'. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as irbis (Kow. 324, Haltd 72) from which the word entered European zoological terminology and was re-borrowed in NE Lęb., Tel. Irbis R I 1471. NE Tuv. irbīs prob. preserves the original pronunciation, but it might have been Irpīš. All the early occurrences are in Uyg. where the alphabet is so ambiguous that the final sound is not quite certain; it was certainly not -s and both -ç and -z are improbable. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. irbīs is included in lists of savage beasts with 'lion, leopard', etc. in TT VI 116: Sis, 331, 23: 599, 16; 610, 13; irbīs kuďroğ: translates Chinese pao wei 'panther's tail' (Giles 8, 607 12, 601), the name of a constellation TT VI 93; in U IV 44, 6 and 11 apparently spelt Irbīş.

Dis. V. ARB-arva:- 'to make magic, cast spells'. Survives, generally as arba- in some NE languages: SE Türki; NC Kir., Kxz., and as arva- in SC Uzb. Xak. xii kaṃ arvaś (later misvocalized arvay in the MS.) arvādα: raqγl- kāhīn ruqya 'the sorcerer cast a spell' Kaš. I 283 (arvar, arva:mak): Çağ. xv ff. arba- afti:n kardan 'to make magic' Saq. 34v. 23.

érpe-: Hap. leg., but see erpē-, ērpēl. Xak. xii ol yiğić ērpedli: 'he saved (naqara) the wood' (etc.); and one says ol ışış ērpedli: āfsada-l-amr li-mā arādo islāhāhu 'he spoilt the business in trying to improve it' Kaš. I 271 (ērpe, ērpe:me:k).

?D ėrpe:- 'to be shaggy, dishevelled', and the like, is not actually noted but must be the basis of ürpek, örpē-, örpe:-; its relationship to the practically synonymous ürpe:- is obscure, but the likeliest explanation is that both are Den. V.s in -e- and -er- respectively fr. öürp. The modern forms örpē:- and the like which survive in NC Kir., Kxz. and NW Kar. Ṭ, Ḫk., and Nog. seem to go back to örpe:- rather than ürpe:-.

D ērpēt- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of örpe:-. Xak. xii ol yiğığ ērpetti: 'he gave orders for the wood (etc.) to be sawn with a saw' (bi-nāprīl/-xāṣab wa gayrīh bi'l minār) Kaš. I 260 (ērpetür, ērpetme:k).

D ürpet- Caus. f. of ürpe:-; 'to make (the hair, etc.) dishevelled'. Survives as ürpeyt- and the like in the languages listed under ürpe:-. Xak. xii er baṣṣi ürpetti: 'the man ruffled (ṣa'afa) his head (etc.)' Kaš. I 259 (ērpetür, ürpetmek; MS in error -ma:k).

ordu; ordu: Preliminary note. This is one of the few cases in which two words semantically different are, at any rate in Tūrki and Xak., differentiated phonetically only by the difference between -rd- and -rt-; in Uyğ., owing to the ambiguity of the script, only the context can decide which word is intended. The second is spelt orto in TT VIII, and the fact that in most modern languages both words now end in -a suggests that originally both ended in -a: ṉ. It is prob. that the words, entered as 1 and 2 ordu; have a common origin, but as they had developed quite different meanings by XI they have been entered separately; -rd- is an unusual combination of sounds in Tūrki and suggests that this is a l.-w., cf. 2 karşi.

1 ordu: (ordo:) originally 'a royal residence', that is 'palace' or 'royal camp' as the circumstances demanded; in the religious (Bud. and Man.) texts also 'a heavenly mansion'. An early l.-w. for 'palace, royal camp' as ordo in Mong. (Haemisch 125). Survives in NE Tuv. ordu; SE Tūrki orda Shaw 20, BŠ 761, Jar- rîng 215 (with Sec. s.f.); NC Kır. ordo; Kzx. orda; SC Uzb. orda; NW Kk., Nag. orda; SW Az., Osm. ordu, 'Tkm. orda. In SW Az., Osm. it came to mean 'a royal camp', thence any 'military camp' and finally, in military terminology, the largest type of military formation, 'army'. Elsewhere it retained its original meaning, but there are indications that in some languages it was reborrowed fr. Mong. See Doerfler II 452. Tūrki viii Oğuz yağğ:

D ortuk (ortok) apparently Den. N. fr. ortu-, but the function of the Suff., normally Diminutive, is obscure; 'partner'. Became ortak at a fairly early date (the MS. of Kaş. where the scribe tended to substitute the later form must have been written during the transitional period). S.i.a.m.lg. ortok in NE Alt., Tel. ?D őrdek a generic term for 'duck', particular varieties being distinguished by qualifying Adjs. or Nouns. Exceptionally Kaş. consistently translates őrdek 'goose' and ka:z 'duck', but this must be an error. Morphologically perhaps Dev. N. fr. őr- (the bird) 'which rises' (from the water). The meta-thesized form in Swv. (of which the MS. is xiv) must be a Sec. f.; it survives as őrtek in NE Tuv. and the eccentric forms in Xwar. and Kip. may also go back to it. S.i.a.m.lg., normally as őrdek and the like. See Doerfer II 450. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (oxen, sheep, swine) kaz ödirek takigu 'geese, ducks, and poultry' Swv. 4, 12: xiv Chin.-Uyğ. Dict. D örtülgün: Conc. N. fr. örtü; etymologically ‘something covered’, in practice ‘haystack’ and the like. Survives only in NE Şör R I 1842 and Khak. örtün ‘threshing-floor’. The status of the Kip. word is uncertain; it may belong here, but Mong. inder ‘balcony, raised platform’ (Kow. 279, Haltod 62) was borrowed, as indirfindir in some NW languages to represent ‘threshing-floor’ and is listed in Kom. XIV Gr. 273; it survives in NW Kar R I 1364, Kow. 194 and in SW xx Anat. SDD 771 (from one place only); the Kip. word might be a metathesis of this. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. in a contract for the sale of land USp. 108, 18-20 the boundaries are described as: E. Buxhan kultun Örtüg; S. ‘the big road’; W. ‘Taçt’s land’; N. D erdem: Den. N. fr. īr; etymologically ‘manly qualities’, esp. ‘bravery’, but more commonly used in a broader sense for ‘goodness, virtue, good qualities’ and sometimes applied to things as well as people. In Uyg. sometimes appears metathesized as īrde. An early loan-word in Mong. where it was originally used for ‘competence, efficiency, capability’ (Haenisch 44) and later also for ‘wisdom, knowledge’ (Kow. 260, Haltod 60). NE Tuv. īrtem ‘knowledge, science’ Pol. 587 is no doubt reborrowed fr. Mong., but SW xx Anat. īrden/iřem ‘virtue, excellence’ SDD 542 is a direct survival. See Doerfer II 451. ?S ārdeš N. of Assn., ?fr. 2 ēr (yēr), pec. to KB and used only in conjunction with other similar words; in 1697 glossed ārdeš in the Fergana MS.; since Kaş. describes ārdeš as Īqūz and mentions 2 ēr as a Sec. f. of yēr in Xak. this is possibly correct, because 'fellow countryman' is a likely meaning in the context and the meaning of a N. of Assn. fr. 1 ēr is not obvious. D artur-., etc. Preliminary note. It is morphologically almost impossible to distinguish between the Caus. f.s of ar- and art-. Only those of 2 ar- and 2 art- occur in the early period. Ardur- Caus. f. of 1 ar- 'to tire (someone) out' is first noted in XIV Muh. Mel. 41, 12; 42, 2; Rif. 132 and survives in NW Kaz. Artur-/ arttur- the Caus. f. of 1 art-(ard-) exists in several NE, SE, and NC languages, but is not noted before XIX.

D 1 artur-  Hap. len.; Caus. f. of 2 ar-; cf. the quotns. under that word, and artiz-. Türkii vii süçülg sav:i-pa; yimşak agis:sa: artur:up ükii: süçülg boðun öltig 'letting yourselves be tricked by their honeyed words and luxurious treasures many of you Turkii people died' I S 6; II N 5.

D 2 artur-  Caus. f. of 2 ar-; 'to cause (something) to increase, grow bigger', with various extended meanings, esp. in SW. Si.a.m.lgc., usually as artur- / artur- Xak. xi on yarmak üze: bir arturdu: zada tawhid 'allâ 'asrâr darârîm 'he added one more on top of the ten silver coins'; and one says er arturdu: 'adâd-racul tawrah 'the man gave himself airs'; (verse) kold: berü: arturul: bûrül: âlun (VU) ertiirî: 'he came towards us with an enormous army, boasting and giving himself airs (yaslaft wa ya'da tawrah); then he surrendered his realm to us' (the third and sixth words are vocalized the same, but must have different meanings; the first is obviously arturu: 'boasting'; the second is not specifically translated, but the likeliest explanation is that it is the Ger. of 2 ertiir- 'letting it pass to us') Kaç. I 219 (arturur, arturmak:); KB (he went every day) tapuq arturu: 'giving more and more service' 610; âukur kalsa ni'mat bayat arturur 'if (a man) gives thanks, God increases His favours to him' 756; xiiii(?). D ertur-, etc. Preliminary note. As in the case of artur-, verbs of this form may be Caus. f.s of 1 er-, 2 er- or 1 or 2 ert-, but all early forms seem to be explicable as Caus. f.s of 2 er-, which is rare, or 1 ert- which is not much commoner.

D 1 ertiir-  Caus. f. of 2 er-; 'to cause to arrive, bring to a successful conclusion' and the like. Survives only (?) in SW Osm. erdir-. Türkii vii tokunç yaz âyet: otuzka: yoz ertiir-imiz 'we brought the funeral ceremonies to a conclusion on the 27th of the 9th month' I NE; similar phr. II S 10; a.o. I E 40 (ükün:).

D 2 ertiir- Caus. f. of 1 ertiir-; 'to cause to pass, pass by', etc. with various extended meanings. Survives as ertiir- / ertiir- in most NE languages R I 793, Khak., Tuv., and perhaps NC Kx. (R I 793, not MM). Üyû. viii ff. Bud. [gap] ertiirûr emizim 'we have passed (our lives?) eriğ, etc. Preliminary note. Kaş. lists a number of words spelt alf-r-käf, but the vocalization of the printed texts and editions is not wholly reliable. The order of the words is chaotic and seems to be as follows (numbering the words as below) 1 error, örik, örük, 1 irig, 4 eriğ, îrik, 2 èрук, 5 erilg (sic), 2 irlig; Uyğ. has some of these words and also 1 irig, 2 erilig, and perhaps 3 erik. 1 erig. Erig. the Acc. of 1 er occurs several times in Türkü, and also in KB where it has sometimes been mistaken for 1 erig, but in 1 S 12 erig is almost certainly not the Acc. of 1 er and may be 3 erig. There are of course considerable possibilities of confusion, particularly between the various eriğs.

1 erig 'advice'; readily recognizable in the Hend. (2) öt erig, but hard to identify when alone. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. sızıp üstünlûn (sic) eriğlizn 'your advice' TT VIII N.10: bazılarınıp uluğlarını körğütmüş boşgünmiş ötine eriğlincı incip evrilmeldim eser 'If I have not behaved in accordance with the advice (Hend.) displayed and learnt of the teachers and great ones' Swv. 136, 4–6; yaqıp nomluy ćılıgler teg ötin eriğin disseminating his advice (Hend.) like the dharmarajôs' Hûn-tûns. 2003–4; a. o. do. 2017: Xak. xi KB öt sav erig 'advice and guidance' 1548, 2517, 3984, etc.; erig in the phr. snaddi erig 593 (and 619, 764) seems to mean the man'.

D 2 erig (ćeğir) in the phr. barig. N.s fr. er- bar- (see 2 er-); pec. to Uyğ. but see 5 erig. Uyğ. vii ff. Bud. D) ērklig P.N.A. fr. ērk; both 'possessing power or authority' and 'possessing free-will or independence, free to do as one likes'. The two meanings are very close together, and it is often difficult to decide which is intended; when applied to God prob. both are, and 'mighty' is the best translation, though it does not give the whole meaning. Survives in NC Kir. erktü; Kxz. ērktli, ērktli, and NW Kar. L., T. ērktli; Zac. īrktli. D 1 Irkin Intrans. Dev. N./A. fr. irk.; 'collected together in one place' and the like. Survives in SW xx Anat. irkin (and irkin) 'a hoard, buried treasure' SDD 796, and also perhaps Osm. ürkün 'a pool of rain water' and the like. Xak. XI Irkin suv al-mā'ul-mustanqa 'stagnant water'; also used of anything collected together (muqam)'; hence the chiefs (akhib) of the Karlik are called köl Irkin meaning that 'his intellect is concentrated like a full pool' (aq schedule mutam 'ka'l-ğādir-i-munqal') (see 2 irkin; Irkin yağmur al-ma'faral-d-a'im ayydım 'continuous rain for several days' Kaj. 1108.

2 irkin a title borne by tribal chiefs, inferior to xajlan but superior to bg. cf. elteber, 1 ċor. In addition to the occurrences in Turkish-Uyghur in the word often occurs in Chinese records transcribed i-kin (sometimes mis-spelt sū-kin owing to confusion between two similar Chinese characters). The subject is discussed at length by F. W. K. Müller in 'Uigurische Glossen' in the Festschrift für Friedrich Hirth, Berlin, 1920, pp. 317 ff where it is stated that the title Kül Irkin (sic) also occurs in Raşidul'd-din and Abîl-gêzî, but in the Russian translation of the former, Rashid-ad-din. Sbornik letopisec, Moscow—Leningrad, 1952 ff., vol. I, p. 147, the spelling is Kül Irkin. Kaj.'s etymology is unconvincing; it is almost certain that the title ĉâ qül, i.e. is not identical with köl; this word, too, is prob. merely a title, but if it is der. fr. irk- the meaning is prob. something like 'convener'. Xak. xi aran (with back vowels) al-ârî 'a stable' Kaβ. I 76. Çaq. xv ff. aran (1) 'a row of stakes (sîdâ) which they erect in game-paths for hunting purposes (quotn.); (2) 'an enclosure (muhaawenat) which they make for cattle to sleep in' San. 36v. 15.

D eren irregular Plur. of 1 er; properly 'men', but as in the case of oğlan, its true nature was forgotten quite early, and it was treated as a Sing. S.i.a.m.l.g. usually meaning 'real man, fighting man', and the like. Türkvi viii eren is fairly common but invariably follows a numeral or numerical expression like az 'few', which suggests that it was regarded more as a collective than a Plur. (which would not normally follow a numeral), e.g. kaŋım xaŋan yetî yeğirmi: eren taşkimisi 'my father the xaŋan and 17 men marched out' IE 11, IE 10; o.o. orun (orun) originally 'place', and more specifically 'high place, throne'; the first is quite clear in phr. like yeq orun 'a place' (Hend.) and the second in phr. like linxwa orun 'lotus throne'; also used abstractly in phr. like orunta: 'in place of (something else)'; An early l.-w. in Mong. as orun 'throne' (Höneysch 126), later 'place, country, province', and other meanings (Kow. 447, Halldot 82). F ören 'bad, ruined'; as Kaş, says a corruption of Persian wárārn, which occurs as a l.-w. in several modern languages in its original or a corrupt form, e.g. NC Kır., Kex. oyran/oyron. The latest trace of ören is in Osm. Sami 200, where it is described as "obsolete". Öğuz xı ören al-radi 'min kull ʂaw' 'bad' of anything; I consider this to be taken from the Per. word wārān 'ruined' (al-xarəb); the Öğuz when they mixed with the Persians (ıxtalatı bi-l-furs) forgot many Turkish words and used Pe. words instead; this is one of them Kaş. I 76: Osm. xiv ören 'ruined, desolate' in several texts TTS I 568; II 755.

F(E) üren the Mongolian word üren 'seed, fruit, progeny' (Kow. 577, Halldot 126) occurs as a l.-w. in several NE languages and NC Kır. It has also been read in Türkî viii ff. Man. üren yaşarun yaşıtlar 'the seed turns green and spreads' M III 20, 10–11 (i), but it is said that the text is very difficult to read, and there is no reasonable doubt that this word is a misreading of evin.

ürün 'white' in a general sense, cf. I a:k Very common down to xı but almost obsolete thereafter. Survives in Yakut ürün 'white' (Pek. 3178), and perhaps NC Kır. ürün baɾan 'dawn' and SW xx Anat. ürün 'milk, yogur' SDD 1436. Sporadic Uyğ. spellings yürün are unlikely to represent an earlier form. D I erîç like erki: and erken, q.v., a very archaic der. f. of er-; its particular function (see v. G. ATG, para. 359) seems to be to make statements in which it is included less than categorically, and it is usually best translated 'presumably, supposedly', and the like. N.o.a.b. Türkü viii (their xoguans were wise and tough) buyrukû: yeme: biğele: ermiş erîç alp ermişî erîç 'their officers, too, were presumably wise and tough' ... an: üçün elğü açça: tutmuş erîç 'and for this reason apparently they thus held the realm' IIE 3, II E 4; a whole string of similar phr. follows IIE 5, IIIE 5, 6; IIE 11, IIIE 10; o.o. D urunç 'bribe'; the only modern survival is SW xx Anat. örunç SDD 1118, noted in one village only; if it can be assumed that this is a mispronunciation, the obvious explanation of this word is to take it as a Dev. N. fr. urun- in the sense of 'something put down'. Cf. urunçak. Xak. xi urunç al-riswa 'a bribe' Kaş. I 132; III 449 (duplicate entries); o.o. VUD 2 işlen- (işlen-) Refl. Den. V. fr. 2 iş (2ış); 'to be blocked with smoke'. Similar difficulties and confusions arise in regard to the vocalization and survival of this word as in the case of 2 iş, but broadly speaking it survives in the same languages and with the same phonetic changes. In Kaş. the position is further complicated by the fact that this verb, which probably had back vowels, and 1 işlen-, which almost certainly had front vowels, are treated in a single para., with the result that the İnfm. is shown as -mæk altered to -mek or vice versa. In addition a later scribe familiar with modern forms of this verb like Osm. işlen- altered the -s to -ş- Xak. xi ev (VU) işländan: laziqa'l-daxan bi'll-bayt 'we astounded minhu 'the smoke passed to the house, and it was blackened by it'; also used of clothing and other things Kaş. D oymː Pass. Dev. N./A. fr. oyː; s.i.a.m.lg. usually meaning 'engraved or decorated work'. This seems to be the word used in a cryptic para. in IrkB about gambling. PUD uyar this word has been read in two O. Kir. ix ff. and one Türkü viii ff. Yen. inscription, Mal. 10, 17, and 28, for the text of the last see E inilğü. This last passage and Mal. 10, 2 yüz er kadaşim uyarin üçin stand together; in both uyar could be an Aor. of u-: used as a Noun to mean 'ability', 'because of the ability of my hundred kinsmen' and, in 28, 4, 'because of the ability of my elder and younger brothers', but in that case the word might well be uyur, q.v. This explanation does not suit Mal. 17 where the word has been read three times uyar kada- sınıma üçin 17, 2; uyar beğimke: ... uyar kadaşımka: 17, 3; this text is a very unsatisfactory one, and it would not be too difficult, epigraphically speaking, to correct the word to öz; 'for the sake of my own relations by marriage'; (I have been parted from) 'my own beg ... and my own kinsmen': Talas ix ff. (?) Talas 117 (see özge):.

D uyur presumably Aor. of u-: used as a Noun; 'capable, powerful', and the like, cf. uğan and see uyur. Türkü viii ff. (the xan mounted the throne and established his court) tört buluntaki edğüb: uyur. 56 11: 'The xan: meşle:lyûr bedîzleyüb: his good and capable men in all quarters of the world assemble, rejoice and adorn (his court)' IربB 28: Uyg. viii ff. Man. the word has been restored in elîg beylıg [uyur]larmı' of the king, begs and powerful men' Wind. 31: (Xwar. xiv uyur in Qutb 197 identified with this word looks more like a finite verb).

üyür some kind of small seed, 'millet' or the like. The Brahmi (TT VIII) spelling uyuri would normally be read ērī or uyurı but is the only convenient way of writing uyür in this alphabet. In the Uyg. script the word is sometimes spelt uyur, sometimes uyur and uyur or uyır. The Xak. form uyır is unexpected and probably the same word in a different dialect. There is disagreement among the meanings of kaz uyur; Müller in a note in Pfahl. 14 says that in an unpublished text (T III 56-4) it corresponds to Chinese su mo 'Perilla ocyoides' (Giles 1,320 7,969), and v. G. in a note in TT VIII 68 that in Swv. 476, 12 it corresponds to Chinese chieh ts’un 'mustard seed' (Giles 1,525 11,317). N.o.a.b. Uyg. viii ff. öz basically the intangible part of human personality 'spirit' as opposed to the tangible body, hence the early compound word etöz, q.v., 'a live body', lit. 'flesh and spirit'; from this it came usually to mean no more than 'self' (generally with Poss. Suffixs.), but sometimes 'the interior part of an organism, pith, marrow', and the like. It is not always easy to catch the exact sense in some passages, but 'self' is the commonest meaning, and often in this sense it is combined with kentü, usually as kentü: öz, less often öz kentü. An ancient word surviving in Çuw. as var 'centre, middle', Astd. I 166. S.i.a.m.t.g., but rare in NE where it is öz-füs. Türkü viii öz 'self' is very common, esp. in the forms özüm 'I myself' and özül: he himself'; in II 11 çintan ḏaqa ketürpi öz zar[gap] 'bringing sandal-wood trees ...' it perhaps means 'the heart wood of a tree'; in T 34 bilgč: Türkük aniq ol öz ol (see anche) it is prob. an error for uz: viii ff. öz 'self', with Poss. D 2 ızık Dim. f. fr. 2 ızz; 'a small valley'. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. ızık R 1302; NC Kzx. ızık MM 493 and SW xx Anat. ızık SDD 1125. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. TT V 28, 122-3 (2 ızz); this word corresponds to chri 'a stream, or valley between two mountains' (Giles 1007) in the Chinese original: (Xak. xi see üzük).

VU?C or S ızık Kaş.'s explanation is possible, but it is perhaps a Sec. f. of 1 ızık, with the vocalization altered to suit the etymology. Çğilı xi ızık laqag li't-nisa'a 'a Proper Name for women'; hence one says altun ızık naqiyatul-nafs kal-dahabi-xalıś 'with a soul as pure as pure gold', and ertzınl: ızık saqiyatul-śaban kal-durra 'with a body as pure as a pearl'; because the peerless pearl is called ertzınl: and is contracted (sic, see ertzınl:); this Proper Name is used of Çğil women; its origin is ızık al-nafs and the kaf i.e. -ık attached to a word to mean 'pre-cisely that thing'; hence one says ol ermist ık keldür 'bring that man (and not someone else)'; with words with back vowels and those containing ık or ıkuy ok is used instead Kaş. I 71; a.o. I 141 (értini).

D üzük Pass. N./A.S. fr. üz-; 'broken, torn off', and the like. It is not clear whether the entry in Kaş. is correctly placed here, or whether it should be transcribed özük and regarded as a Sec. f. of 1 ızık. In a number of medieval and modern languages üzük is a Sec. f. of yüzük, q.v., and the word in Çağ. relating to a tent may belong there. Türkü viii ff. Irh B 48 (ula-): (Uyğ. see üzük-suz): Xak. xi üzük hull mā istancala minal-ărđ wa şara biyyad 'any piece of ground which is swampy and becomes waterlogged'; and any 'branch of a valley' (yalic minal-awidiya) is called üzük suv Kaş. I 71: (xvıı Rbg. (some of their statements are) üzük 'abbreviated' R I 1896, but the older B.M. MS., xv. 16, has kesüük, same meaning): Çağ. xv ff. üzük ' (with -k)' xargah asbābi . . . wa xātim 'components of a tent . . . özge: 'other, other than (something Abi)', different. Poorly attested in the early period, the occurrence in Talas is very dubious, the Uyğ. documents quoted are xii or later, and the supposed occurrence in KB 1375 (see R I 1294) is imaginary (etözke read at özge), but s.i.a.m.l.g. Cf. adın, adrük, öpl: Talas ix ff. (?) özge: uyarmıa: adrilım 'separated from his other capable men?' (?) INITIAL LABIAL PLOSIVES

Preliminary note. The initial labial sounds in the Turkish languages were discussed at length in a paper of that name (Studies, p. xvii) and the conclusions there reached are summarized in Studies, pp. 177–2. Briefly they are as follows: (1) there were originally in pre-VIII Turkish both voiced and unvoiced initial labial plosives, b- and p-, but the latter had disappeared nearly everywhere by VIII, and is now found only in a few words in some languages in the Oğuz group, which was unusually conservative in some matters; (2) contrary to this tendency, some Oğuz languages converted the initial b- in three words bar, bar-, and bér-, and words derived from them into v- at an early date; (3) m- was not an initial sound in native Turkish words in pre-VIII Turkish, but evolved by a process of retrogressive assimilation in most languages, probably during VIII, in words containing a nasal sound later in the word. In this case, too, the Oğuz languages were conservative and retained the original b-, which is also found sporadically in Türkî VIII, and VIII ff. Yen., and in Uyg. VIII, Şu. only. Where the later nasal was n or ŋ the position is quite clear, 'I is ben in the languages just mentioned and men elsewhere. Where but the nasal was f the position is confused by the fact that in most words this f had become y before the word comes to our notice. Exceptionally we can be sure that 'dung' was *ba'fak because, in addition to the Uyg., Xak., etc. form mayak, Kaş, records an Oğuz form baynak, but in the case of a word like mu'gak the original form *bu'gak can only be inferred.

In the present section all words are indexed with initial b-; where there is evidence from the Oğuz languages that it was originally p-, (p-), or in doubtful cases (? p-) is added after the word. Where a word containing a nasal is noted only with initial m-, it is indexed in that form, but the original form with initial *b- is listed here with a cross-reference, but where the original b-survives somewhere, even if only in a modern language it is indexed in that form.

1) baçaq N.Ac. fr. baça- ‘a (religious) fast’. A Turkish l.-w. in Mong. as baçaq (Kow. 1081) and also maçaq (Kow. 1996) which shows it must also have been used in Uyğ. Bud. Salemann, who was unaware of the etymology and true meaning of this word, suggested that it was a l.-w. fr. Sogdian p'tyqk 'hymn', a word which does exist as a l.-w. in Turkish, see pəşik, and Benveniste accepted this in Journal asiatique, vol. 236, 2, p. 184, but it is an error. N.o.a.b. D biçak Pass. N./A.S. fr. biç-; properly 'cut', but usually 'half', cf. yarım. The word is unvocalized in Kaf., but was prob. still spelt biçak; in the medieval period it tended to become biçuk by regressive assimilation. Survives in SE Türkî piştikt 'snub-nosed' Shaw 58; ditto and 'with broken edges' BŞ 127; 'a piece; dilapidated' Farring 232, and SW Osm. biçak 'half'. Xak. xī biçuk(?) D biçiğak Dev. N. (Conc. N.) fr. biç-; lit. 'something cut off', 'segment', and the like, with various particular applications. In some languages, even Uyğ. (see bučiğ:aksiz), became bučiğak by labial assimilation at a very early date. Survives in Kaş's last meaning in NE Şor piştik; Tel. piştik R IV 1318-22; Tuv. biçiğ:ak; SE Türkî piştik BŞ 127 and NC Kir. biçiğ:ak and for 'corner' and the like in several NW and SW languages as bučak/bučak. D biçiğ:as der. fr. biç-; for the meaning cf. biçiğ. There is no doubt that Kaş. intended the word to be spelt in this way, it is placed with bekmes and kirbas: in a section headed -S, but there is no other known word with the Suff. -gas: and it may be a Sec. f. of -ga: dissimilated fr. the preceding -ç. bat Preliminary note. There is no doubt about the existence of an Adv. bat (Ipat) which was originally a pure onomatopoeic (see Kâş.), and came to mean 'quickly' and the like. There is no reason to doubt the authenticity of a second bat noted in Kâş., and prob. surviving in NC Kir. Finally there are two or perhaps three early occurrences of what seems to be a different word which may survive in NE Tuv.

1 bat (Ipat) originally an onomatopoeic for the sound of a falling object hitting the ground, but normally used as an onomatopoeic meaning 'quickly, hurriedly'. Survives in NE Tuv. pat 'extremely' (e.g. tired) Pol. 328; SE Türkî pat 'quickly, soon' Shaw. BS, farrin; NC Kir. bat ditto; SC Uzb. bat ditto; SW Osman. pat ditto, and onomatopoeic. Uyg. viii ff. Civ. (the child) bat tüşer 'is soon born' H I 23; bat edgî bolur 'he quickly recovers' do. 28; o.o. TT VII 28, 28 (opaz-); 28, 37: Xak. xî one says bat kel, like the expression (VU) sap kel in telling (someone) to hurry (hîl-înd); and for the sound (hîz-ät) of anything light which falls bat tüsîdl: ('it fell with a plop') Kaj. I 319: Çağ. xv ff. bat zîd va sari 'quick, quickly (quotn.); bat bat zîd zîd San. 119v. 13: Xwar. XIII bat 'quickly' "Ali 47.

2 bat perhaps survives in NE Kir. bat 'glue, paste'. Xak. xi bat al-jaçir 'the thick juice of pressed dates' Kaj. I 319.

3 bat the first two quotes. below come fr. inscriptions of which the text is very dubious, but if rightly read may the word pretended to survive in NE Tuv. pat 'worthless, insignificant' Pol. 328; the third quote, may have 1 bat in an unusual meaning. Türkü viii (gap) yayic bat biz aziq ükûsüg körtîlg er[sik]til: sül'e[I]m 'we are in a bad way and worth very little; you have seen how few (we are) and how many (they are); let us take the field bravely' Öngin 7: O. (if a man has offended the begs and they contemplate killing or torturing him, their swords and saws(?), and whips break into small pieces and) neq bat kilû umaz 'they cannot do him harm('? Kuan. 27.

bêt 'the (human) face'. Rare in the early period being syn. w. 2 yûz but survives with this and extended meanings, 'cheek, the surface (of water)', etc., as bêt/bet in NC Kir. Kâş.: SC Uzb; several NW languages and in SW Osman. in the phr. bet bezî 'com- pletion'. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. (tantric) bir yeğîrmînc isak(?) atîq uzîk ol bêtî ize urgu ol 'the eleventh is the letter called isak (?); one should put it on one's face' TT VII 41, 2-5: Çağ. xv ff. bet rû va 'ari rî 'face, cheek' San. 119v. 19.

bit originally 'louse', but also used for 'bug' and other parasites, including those on stored products. S.i.a.m.lg. Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A tonunî bitî 'body (lit. clothes)' louse' M l 8, 14: Xak. xî bit al-qaml 'louse'; and the worm (al-did) which attacks wheat is called tariq bitî: Kaj. 1 bõd prob. originally 'stature, the size of a man'; but from the earliest period it also clearly means 'a clan', the Sing. of boðun, q.v.; the meaning underlying the latter is perhaps 'lineage' that is the size of a clan as a number of natural families. S.i.a.m.lg.; in NE bot/pot/pou/poy, elsewhere usually boy, usually 'stature', but in NE 'self'; the meaning 'clan' is rare, but survives in SW Osman. See Doerfer II 812. Türkü viii (the Türkî people (boðun) died, disintegrated, and were destroyed) Türkü şiîrî (?) boðun yerînte: boð kalmadî: 'no clan remained in the country of the fortunate(?) Türkî people to be the original form of boy in "bo:d monçuk" presumably contains a similar error.

1 buti (bud:) properly 'the thigh'; sometimes more generally 'the leg', 'the hind legs (of an animal)', and the like. The original -d, which could in any case be inferred fr. the long vowel, survives in Sw Az. bud and the obsolete cases (budu, etc.) in Osm. and the long vowel in Tkm. butu. Sia.a.m.lg.; cf. ugluk. Uyg. viii ff. (But. but kutúrmecê tiniq oglanla'n) 'for the sons of men who walk on their legs' TT VII 40, 141-2 is thus transcribed in the text, but the word is more likely to be bod 'having a bodily form': Civ. kolun butun sizlarat 'it makes his arms and legs ache' TT VII 25, 2; kayu kişinin köli butu baş yomgâ tepreser 'if a man's (arms), legs, and head all twitch' do. 34, 2-3; Xak. buti al-fâsid 'the thigh' Kas. D bodun Plur. or Collective f. (?) of 1 boğ, cf. eren; lit. 'clans', in practice a semitechnical term for 'an organized tribal community, a people', in the sense of a community ruled by a particular ruler; hence, esp. in such phr. as kara: bodun, 'the common people' in antithesis to the supreme ruler, and the subordinate tribal or clan rulers, the begi. Very common in the early period but n.o.a.b. Kaş. mentions a form boyun as current in languages in which -d- had become -y-, but there is no record of the word in this sense, although it is common meaning 'neck'. Türkü vii bodun is perhaps the commonest word in the inscriptions; it occurs (1) by itself; (2) in the expression used by a ruler bodunım 'my people'; (3) preceded by an ethnic name, which may be either Turkish or foreign, e.g. Türkü bodun 'the Türkü people'; Tavğıç bodun 'the Chinese people' (practically equivalent to 'the Chinese Empire') I S 4, 5 etc.; Soğdak bodun 'the Sorbian people' I E 39; (2) and (3) both occur in tokuz oğuz boğun kentü: bodunım erti: 'the Tokkuz Oğuz people were my own (subject) people' I N 4. The later meaning occurs in kara: bodun 'the common people' II E 41 and Türkü kara: kamağ bodun 'all the Türkü common people' I E 8-9, II E 8, and is even clearer in I E 6, II E 6 (ücün): viii ff. III 169; KB bodun is very common, it sometimes means 'the people' as a community but more often 'people' as individuals, e.g. (the Prophet) bodunda talusı kıside keği 'most excellent of people and best of men' 34; bodunım till 'people's tongues' 194; bayudi bodun 'the people (the community) became rich' 291: XIII (?) At. bodun talusı 257; bir ança bodun 'a few people' 123; 421 (ur-); Tef. bodun is common translating al-qawun, al-ahl 'the people', al-ahzāb 'groups of men', etc. 109 bodun ditto (once?) 110.

badar (padar?) onomatopoeic for the sound of footsteps and the like. Survives only (?) in SW Osm., Tkm. patir patar, same meaning. Cf. English patter. Xak. xi patar badar yûgûrdî: ada wa sum'a it-adawî haqfa(n) 'he ran and (the sound of) his footsteps was heard faintly' Kaš. I 360 (MS., in error, yadar yadatar); a.o. I 349 (çalk).

F patir Sanskrit pâtra 'a bowl', received through Sogdian p'tir. N.o.a.b. Became a l.-w. in Mong. as badir (Kow. 1070); badar (Haldot 273) specifically for 'a monk's begging bowl'. Uyğ. xxi ff. Bud. (the Buddha said, 'my good Ananda') patirimin (PU) sancugmun kötûrgil 'take up my begging bowl and my (?)' PUF butar Hap. leg.; this is the first entry in the section headed -R and precedes badar; the first letter is undotted but must be bâ and carries a āmma, the second has two faint dots and is unvocalized; this section is not free from scribal errors (see badar) and judging by the meaning, it is likely that Kaš. actually wrote papur. Xak. xi butar fâtu'l-hirdi 'the papyrus reed' Kaš. I 360.

PU?F batrak 'flag, banner, standard'. First occurs in Uyğ. as part of the panoply of demons in association with various l.-w. s. of Sanskrit origin and probably itself a similar l.-w., possibly received through Sogdian. It has no obvious Turkish etymology, and its phonetic history is obscure. The Uyğ. alphabet is too ambiguous (b/p, d/j/dj) to make its Uyğ. pronunciation certain; the second vowel was rounded but this is unparalleled elsewhere. The Xak. spelling was certainly batrak, the main entry preceding that of buçak; it was originally the same elsewhere, but some later user of the MS. added two dots below the tâ, and this caused the spelling bayrak in the printed edition. By Çağ. the word had in fact become bayrak and this is the form in all modern SE, SC, NW, and SW languages in which the word survives; there must therefore have been, subsequent to Xak., an evolution batrak > badrak > badrak > bayrak, the intermediate stages of which are lost. See Doerfer II 727, 824. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. (the demons holding in their hands) trzul (PU) batrak 'tridents (Sanskrit triśula) and flags' U IV 8, 9; trzul (PU) batrak vìrîg tòkımak 'tridents, flags, thunderbolt (wajra) maces' do. 8, 39-40; trzul (PU) batrak çirindipal 'tridents, flags, wheels (cekra), and lances (bhindipala)' do. 20, 236-7: Xak. xi batrak 'a lance (mafrada) with a piece of silk at its head which a champion uses as a badge (yatasaowam) on the day of battle' Kaš. I 455; aği: kizil batrak 'the red flag (al-alam) was raised' III 183, 6; a.o. II 305, 2 (talipš-): Çağ. xv ff. bayrak (spelt) 'alam-i hücîc 'a small flag'; also 'the winning-post' (qasaabul'-sabq) in a race San. 138r. 6.

VUD boďrak Hap. leg. in a rather well-preserved inscription. Mal. identifies this with a Çağ. word botrak (P. de C. 161, not in San.) 'scattered', but this is impossible since that word is der. fr. botra- which is not Turkish but a corruption of Mong. bôteere-(Kow. 1231, Haldot 309). Perhaps der. fr. I bođ; but -rak is normally attached to Adj. not Nouns. O. Kır. ix ff. (I have been parted) biğ boďrak yuntim sizime: 'you, my thousand sturdy(?) horses' Mal. 45, 8.

?F bitirk pec. to Xak.; no doubt the basic meaning is 'pistachio nut' and a l.-w. fr. some Iranian language, cf. Pe. pīšith. Xak. xi bitirk bagül'mara 'elitoris'; Argú: xi bitirk al-fulstuq 'pistachio nut' Kaš. I 476.
F badram 'merriment' and the like, hence 'a feast'. No doubt an Iranian l.-w., cf. Pe. ba'dram 'a delightful place' (Steingass). S.i.a.m.l.g. except NE as bayram (in NC KIr. -mayram; Kx. meryam) as the Turkish equivalent of Arabic al-'id 'a (Moslem) feast'. See Doerfer II 82., Xak. xi badram al-sawr wa'll-dahika bayn'al-qanum 'general merriment and laughter', and the ground (al-arid) when it is covered with flowers and blossoms, is called badram yar er arz nazha 'pleasant ground'; I do not know what its origin (asluhu) is because I have heard it from the lips of Persians (al-furs), but the Oğuz call 'the (Moslem) feast day' (yawmala's-0) bayram that is 'a day of pleasant merriment'; the -d- being changed to -y- as is their custom; it is a genuine word (luğa madha, pure Turkish?) in this sense Kaş. I 484; a.o. I 263., 11 (avv.i.): xii(?) Tef. bayram 'religious feast' 80: Çağ. xv ff. bayram al-'id Sam. 1287. 7 (quotn.; also 'a kind of cotton fabric like 'Irāqī linen but finer' (quotn.); there is no other trace of this meaning): Oğuz xı bayram al-'id; I reckon that it is an alteration of the popular word (qatul'l-nās) badram meaning 'merriment and enjoyment'; the (Moslem) feast day is a day of merriment. The pagans do not have a feast day or consequently a word for it; if there was one, all the Turks would know it, but the only ones who know this (word in this sense) are those who have turned -d- into -y- in their language Kaş. III 176: Xwar. xiv bayram 'the (Moslem) feast' MN 20, etc.

(F) bağatur by origin almost certainly a Hunnish (Hsiung-nu) Proper Name, and more specifically that of the second Hsiung-nu shan-yu (209-174 n.C.) whose name was transcribed by the Chinese as Maotun (Giles 7,699 12,221; Old Chinese prob. something like moj-tun). The word occurs only once in the early period and then still as a P.N. but was an early 1.-w. in Mong. as ba'datur (Haenisch 11)bağatur (Kav. 1058), primarily as an element in P.N.s., e.g. Yesege Ba'datur (Haensch 184) but also as a common noun meaning 'picked warrior'. It is prob. that the transition from name to noun took place in Mong.; Turkish had other words like alpağrut with this meaning. The word reappears in Turkish in the medieval period generally in forms with medial -h- which suggest that the immediate source was Pe. S.i.s.m.l. in SE, NC, SC, and NW as barı:batur, R IV 1511-15, which seem to be direct borrowings fr. Mong. See Doerfer II 817 and Studies, p. 19. boğra: 'a camel stallion'. The word was used as a P.N. by the Karakhanid dynasty and was an early l.-w. in Mong. as bu'ura (Hoenisch 24)/bugῦra (Kow. 1166). Survives only in SE Türki bugça Shaw; boğa/buğra/buğur jarring; NC Kir. bura (perhaps reborrowed fr. Mong.) and, until recently, SW Osm. buğur. For camel terminology generally see Schcherbak 103 ff. and J.-P. Roux 'Le chameau en Asie centrale', C.A.J V, pp. 35 ff. See Doerfer II 747. VU buğrî, boğrûl Preliminary note. Although these words are vocalized differently in the MS. the translations make it clear that they are etymologically connected and the most probable explanation is that they are Dev. N.s fr. boğrû-, Cau.s. f. of boğ-, which survives only in NE Sag. poğûr- R IV 1266. A general connotation of ‘throttling’ is therefore indicated, but the precise meaning in this context of al-amt, which has several meanings, is obscure; possibly ‘a bulge’ (in the sense of something produced by excessive pressure) or ‘overfilling’. It is not easy to connect the second meaning of boğrûl with the first, semantically it is easier to connect with boğrûl q.v.

VUD boğruğ Hag. lep.; see above. Xak. xî boğruğ (MS. bıgğî) al-amt fil-l-ğirâ ra’al-’a’bâb wa na[wîhî) ‘a bulge (?) in a sack, milk-skin, or the like’ Kaş I 461.

Xak. xî boğrûl (ra‘ unvocalized) al-amt fil-l-wi‘ât l-mal’ân ra’al-’a’bâb (MS. in error fâbb) wa na[wîhî ‘a bulge (?) in a full food-bag, milk-skin, or the like’ boğlîrg (so vocalized) ko[y al-ğanamâ l-lla’dî iyya’dîa halqîhî ‘a sheep with a white throat’ Kaş I 481.

VU/D bağram Hag. lep.; so vocalized, but etymologically it could be a N.S.A. of bağrî: meaning ‘notched’ that is ‘in ridges’. Xak. xî bağram kum al-ramul‘-’âllîcî’-’ubâyî ‘sand heaped in layers and small hills’; the sands between Kâşgar and Yärkend are called bağram kumî: (sic) Kaş I 484.

VU buğra-: the relationship between the two forms of this verb is morphologically obscure; both are n.o.a.b., but the first seems to be an earlier form of NW Kaž. bûr- ‘to fashion (logs); to build (a house) out of fashioned logs’. They have no connection with buğrâg-, q.v. Xak. xî ol yiğhac buğrâd: ba’darîl-’axap ‘he carved, cut incisions or dovetails, in the wood’ (etc.) Kaş III 277 (buatrâ, buğrâmak): ol yiğhac buğd: ba’darîl-’axap ‘he made incisions or dovetails, in the wood’; the original form (a’sluhî) was bu’grâd: Kaş II 80 (buatur, buğurmak).

VU bukra-: Hag. lep.; this is prob. the correct form of this verb, the -t- in the Perf. seems to be a scribal error caused by the form of the preceding verb. Xak. xî at suç: bu:krî: (sic) wa:ba’al-faras wa camaba ‘the horse reared up and ran away’; this verb is used only in the Hend. (mzilâwâca(n)) Kaş II 279 (buatrâ, bukramâk).

F baçûs: l-w, fr. Chinese po-shih (Giles 9,072 9,099; Ancient Chinese bâk-ši) (Buddhist) 'religious teacher'; an early l-w. in this sense in Mong., occurring in the two A.D. 1352 hPags-pa inscriptions where it is spelt baçûs, not baçûs (the alphabet distinguishes clearly between these two sounds) and still surviving in this form but with rather altered meanings (Haltod 272). As baçûs: is the most probable pronunciation of the Chinese phr. at the date when it was borrowed, the word was prob. so pronounced in Uyğ., where it is common, but as -çûs is not a possible combination in pure Turkish words (see Studies, p. 169) it no doubt fairly soon became baçûs. There is no trace of the word between Uyğ. and Kom. xiv/Çâğ. xv ff., and it is prob. that when it reappeared it had been reborrowed fr. Mong.; by this time it meant 'a scribe' and more specifically 'a scribe able to write in the Uyğ. (or rather Mongolian official) alphabet' (see Studies, pp. 175 ff.). It still survives with such meanings as 'strolling minstrel, magician, shaman, quack doctor' in SE Türkî baçûs Shaw, BS, Jarring; NC Kir. baçûs, Kex. baçûs, and SC Uzb. baçûs. See Doerfer II 724. F beg originally 'the head of a clan, or tribe, a subordinate chief', and the like. C.i.a.p.a.1. from the earliest period, but almost certainly a L.-w. fr. Chinese po 'the head of a hundred men' (Giles 9,358; 'Ancient Chinese' (Karlgren 'poh). Survives with some phonetic changes (b-/>/-; -e/-; -g/-y) and alterations in meaning parallel to the alterations in social structure; e.g. in the Ottoman Empire it came to mean 'a junior administrative officer' and finally hardly more than a complimentary title given to members of the gentry. See Doerfer II 818, 828. Türkî vii. beg is very common; the Türkî 'realm' (êl) consisted of the xoğan and his ministers and officials, begler 'the begs' (one of the very rare uses of the Plur. DF beglig P.N./A. fr. beg.
DF beglik A.N. (sometimes used as Conc. N.) fr. beg. These two words must be taken together since to a large extent they have the same meanings, and in most texts the scripts are too ambiguous to make it possible to determine which word is intended. The P.N./A. usually means 'having the rank, or status of beg', less often it means 'having a chief, or a husband'. The A.N. originally meant 'the rank or status of beg', or 'fit to hold such a rank'. Later it came to mean 'a district governed by a beg'. Beglig now seems to be obsolete, but beglik with various phonetic changes (see beg) s.i.a.m.lg. except NE with some changes of meaning, e.g. in NC Kir blylik is the normal word for a 'government' and SW Osm. belylik often has that sense. Türkü vili taygaç bođunka: beglik urč kul boltr (corrected in II to klttž) they made your sons who were fit to be chiefs slaves to the Chinese people' I 7, II 7; similar phr. Vu bol Hap. leg.; although (Vu) oɡar, q.v., may well be an Ar. l.-w., the resemblance between this word and Ar. baliya, which Kaš. mentions, is purely fortuitous. Xak. xí bol al-farəsəl-məhəcəl 'a horse with white stockings' and al-aːgəɾəl-məhəcəl 'one with a blaze and white stockings' is called (Vu) oɡar bol; and state wheat that has lost its taste is called bol təɾiːɾ; the same ph. is used when it has been spoilt by rain or moisture; and anything that has deteriorated (baliya) with age is called bol; there is a phonetic and semantic resemblance between baliya and bol Kaʃ. baldır, etc. Preliminary note. Kaj. mentions five different words with these consonants variously vocalized, of which the last two present no particular problems. The first is mentioned twice, the second twice, and the third three times followed by the sentence wa hâqîhi-l-arba'a bi-îsâbîl-lâ' and these four have back vowels', the problem is which four? The first word seems to be identical with the well-known word beltrî, there is no difficulty about the difference between -d- and -t-, cf. balutu, Kaj. baldû; the 'four' therefore which have back vowels seem to be the second word, the two mentions being taken as identical, and the three occurrences of the third. These two words therefore, which are pec. to Kaj., can be taken as baldîr. There is another well-known word baldut not mentioned by Kaj.

beldir ‘the junction of two or more roads or rivers’. An early l.-w. in Mong. as belOr (Haa Nelson 14, Kow. 1116, the -r- implies -t- not -d-). Survives in NE several dialects Beltr R IV 1246; Khak. piltr; Tuv. beldr. beldir. vii (I spent the summer there, west of Dulq Ba) yavaq (VU) tokus beltrinda: at the junction of the Yavag and Tokus (rivers) Şu. beldir ‘last year’; Radloff’s suggestion that it is a crisis of the purely modern phr. bir yil dir is, of course, preposterous. Survives in NE Alt., Tel. piitr R IV 1315; Khak. piltr; NC Kir., Kzx. biltir; SC biltur NW Kz. biltur; SW Az., Tkm. bildir. Osm. bldir. It is an open question whether SE Türk beldir/baldır, etc. Shaw 45; BS 55; Farring 47 ‘before, formerly, earlier’ is a survival of this word or 2 beldir but suggests that they may originally have been identical. baldiz ‘a man’s wife’s younger sister’. Survives in this meaning in NW Kz. and SW Az., Osm., Tkm., and also in NC Kir., Kzx. but according to MM 68 in Kzx. it also means ‘younger sister’ and even ‘brother-in-law’. The last usage must be quite modern, but the use of the phr. eke baldiz in Uyğ. directly parallel to eč’il int suggests that it was also sometimes used in the sense of ‘younger sister’ even in Uyğ. Uyğ. viii ff. Bud. Svwt. 554, 15–16 (eke): Xak. xi baldiz uxtul-mar’at’-i-suqrâ ‘a (man’s) wife’s younger sister’; a man’s sister is called sîpl, not baldiz Kas. I 457; a.o. III 7 (yurç): xii (?) ben the 1st Pers. Sing. Pron. 'I'. C.i.a.p.a.l. The vocalization is irregular, the Dat. having apparently always had back vowels. In the other cases the vowel was almost certainly -e-, but spellings with -ê- are fairly common in some languages; it is possible that in some languages, as in the case of sen, the vowel became -ê- when the word was used as a Predicate. The word was originally ben, but except in the Oğuz dialects became men by assimilation at an early date; it is one of the criteria for differentiating between Türkî viii ff. Yen., and O. Kir. Ben now survives only in SW Osm., in all other languages, including SW Az., in Xak., it is now men. The original sound is preserved in Çuv. ep/êpê 'I. Ash. III 20-1, but here too the base of the oblique cases is man do. VII 190. Türkî viii ben (benî; benîp, bağa:) is common, and the only form in T, and perhaps occurs in Ix. 27 (damaged); men (menîp) is the only form in I and II; viii ff. men is common in IrkB; mağâ: Toyok IVv. 3 (ETY II 180): Man. men (Predicate) Çius. 135-6: Yen. men Mal. 28, 7; 29, 11; 32, 7; Uyğ. vii ff. ben occurs seven times in Su. and men once: ix men three times in Suci: viii ff. bar: Kaj 's definition of this word as a Particle (harf) connoting existence, or presence in a particular place as the opposite of yok: q.v., is very apt. It is in fact nearly always used as the predicate of a sentence, the subject being either stated or inferred. In this usage, therefore, it is of the nature of a Verb, but it cannot be conjugated and must be supplemented by an Aux. V., er- or the like, if a mood or tense form is required. Dis. BRA

F bërë: a measure of length; n.o.a.b., but a l.-w. in Mong. as bëre (Kaw. 1126) where it is taken as equivalent to Sanskrit yojana 'a mile of 8,000 yards'. Obviously a l.-w., which, as it is certainly not Chinese and does not look Iranian, is prob. Tokhari. Phonetically the only suitable equivalent is B përe; A cara 'an arrow', which if taken to mean 'a bow shot', which is a unit of length at any rate in Çağ. (see attm), might have such a sense. This explanation is not, however, self-evident. Uyû. viii ff. Man.-A yêmîsî tümen bëre sügpü tel 'like a lance 700,000 bërë long' M I 20, 15-16: Bud. (unpublished fragment) translates Chinese '10,000 li'; a li is about 600 metres.

?D berû?: (?bërû?) an Adv. used both of time and of space, meaning broadly 'to this side, on this side'. The phonetics of this word are obscure. So far as the first vowel is concerned the Türkî spellings of cognate words point more to -ê- than -ë- and there are sporadic spellings with -ë- later, but the evidence for -ë- is not conclusive. The word does not occur in Türkî viii (the word sometimes so read in T 26, 28 is evirû') and the spellings of cognate forms in Türkî and Uyû. are more easily derived fr. *ber- (?bër) than this word. It is, therefore, prob. that berû: is itself a der. f., a crasis of *berrû:, that is *ber (bër) with the Directional Suffix -rû: and this is corroborated by the fact that it is often used in antithesis to VUD borça: Hap. leg.: Equative f. of 2 bor (?), which from the context must be something violent. V. Thomsen (Turcica 94, note 2) suggested that there was an old word bor meaning 'a storm', of which NE, NC barça- 'to be stormy' R IV 1662 was the Den. V.; and it has been suggested that SW Osm. bara 'a violent wind' is a later form. This is not wholly impossible, but it is more probable that Osm. bara is a corruption of Greek boroas 'north wind', and it is very odd that, if there really was a word bor meaning anything as ordinary as 'a storm', there should be no other trace of it. It is more likely that this is the Equative f. of 1 bor 'wine' with the implication that too much wine leads to disorder. ?F barçın 'silk brocade'. N.o.a.b., but the standard word for 'silk' in Çuv. where it is spelt purçın, purçın, purçum, purçun, porçâm, purçân, porçên Asl. IX 300-10 (Çuv. -ç- is a sound like -sy-). One of several words with this meaning; cf. ağâ, eşgüünl, çiç, çîxansu, 2 çîkin, çûz, torku, kaťfâr, kaçaç, kutay, xûlûp, loxtay, zumûm. The Turks did not manufacture silk brocade, and it is unlikely that there were many, if any, native words for it. Morphologically çîxansu, kutay, xûlûp, loxtay, and zumûm look Chinese. Eşgüünl looks Tokharian, since šk, šk- are characteristic initials in that language. Baçan may be a L.-w. fr. Tokharian Pašîm 'treasure' (van Windekens, op. cit. s.v. bokursu; p. 88). N. fr. *burk- or *burkiğ-; the only cognate word is burkur-, q.v., and there are the same morphological problems as in the case of burkiğ: q.v. NE. Tuv. biği 'snort' is presumably a corruption of this word. Xak. xi burkiğ 'the snort (naxır) of a horse or donkey'; one says at burkiğ: Kaş. I 461.

E buğan See hazgan.

D burkani (barkun) Dev. N./A. fr. bar-; the word is in a section of which the heading 'fi'lānfi'lan (variously vocalized)', requires a long vowel in the Suff., which seems to be unique but a Sec. f. of -gān. Pec. to Xak. Xak. xi bārkiğ kişli: 'a traveller (al-raṣūlul-musāfir) whom nothing turns aside from his objective' Kaş. I 440: KB (I treat all people alike, whether they are my son, or a neighbour, or stranger) kerek burkani erse keçiliğin konuk or a guest passing through and determined to push on '817; kişli bārkiğ a man who has travelled widely' 4326; a.o. 4727.

CF burxan compound of Chinese fa (Giles 3,589) and presumably xan. The Chinese character was the one chosen to transcribe Buddha, and was pronounced approximately bur in NW China in vii-viii. This word, corresponding properly to some phr. like Buddharağā, was the one chosen to represent Buddha in the earliest Turkish translations of Buddhist scriptures, which must have antecedent the appearance of Manichaeism among the Turks, and was taken over by the Manichaean missionaries to translate words like 'prophet' applied e.g. to Mani himself. In the Moslem period, like 2 but, q.v. it came to mean 'idol' and still survives in one or two NE languages purkan R IV 1386; Tuv. burğan 'God' and in NC Kir. epics burkan 'idol'. See Doerfer II 732. Türkü viii ff. Man. burxan, usually in the Plur., is common in Chias., e.g. teşrī yalavaçi burxanlar 'God's messengers, the buraxes' 64-5, 69; 'the burxans and the pure Elect' 133; the god Zurvan, the sun and moon gods, the mighty god and the burxans 173-5; teşri Mani burxan M III 15, 7 (i): Uyg. viii ff. Man.-A teşri Mani burxan M I 12, 13: Man. kaşım Mani burxan TT III 2 (and note); M III 36, 1 (i) (teşriken): Bud. burxan Buddha is very common: Civ. buyanlığ kişi burxanlar birle tüz earur 'a virtuous man is equal to the Buddha' TT VII 42, 2; Xak. XI burxan al-tanam 'idol'; and 'a painted idol' (al-dunyay) is called beđiz burxan Kaş. VU borqgyu 'trumpet'; the phonetics are chaotic and it may well be a 1.-w. Kaş. alone has final -y; Muh. may point to -o- and Kom. points to -u- in the first syllable, but it survives in some NE and NW languages as bérq/pirq and in SW Az., Osm. as boru. See Doerfer II 735. Uyg. viii ff. Bud. borgu 'trumpet' in Maitrisimif, see 'Ali 51: Xak. XI borqgyu (in a section for words ending in a long vowel followed by -y) 'the trumpet (al-sabbir) which is blown Kaş. Tef. borgyu/borku 'trumpet' I 111: xiv Muh. in Mel. 5, 9 ff., Rief. 75-6 there is a para. about three pronunciations of vocaic taww, the first pronunciation is -ur- as in urr, urr 'strike' and b urgency; the second is apparently short -ur- illustrated by al-gar (corruption of al-garb 'a blow') urqu; al-biq 'trumpet' borgyu and abdub (corruption of al-axd) alq; and seems to refer to the final -u; the third is apparently -o- or -oz- and is illustrated again by al-gar (sic) orqgu; al-biq borgyu; alldiq 053; and arcw ok. The text is obviously corrupt in places, but does seem to suggest a pronunciation borgyu; a.o. 51, 3; 146: Çağ. xv ff. N. fr. bur- for bür- which is still current with the same range of meanings).

C birük Adv. or Conjunction; bür with ök

(2 ök) attached. A word of very indefinite meaning used at or near the beginning of sentences; v. G. (ATG, para. 417) translates it 'nun, aber' ('well, but, however'); but it is doubtful whether it had even as precise a meaning as this. Except for one occurrence in Türkü, it seems to occur only in Conditional sentences sometimes in the phr. apam birük (see apaq). It is therefore often translated 'if', but this sense is inherent in the Verb even if birük is absent. N.o.a.b. Türkü seems to qualify a Ger. in -lep followed by another finite Verb M I 6; it begins a Cond.

in SE Türkü bürük 'pucker, gather' Shaw 48

'a stuffed pancake', is also a later form of this word. It has no other obvious etymology, but it is consistently spelt with -ö in SC xii

Xiva Vam. 246; several NW languages: SW Osm., berçe: 'a whip'; an old word ending in -ge:

It is suggested in TT IV, p. 18, note B47 that it is a l.-w. fr. Latin virga 'a rod, stick' obtained through Middle Pe. but there does not seem to be any trace of the word in Pe., and the theory is improbable. N.o.a.b., completely displaced by the syn. word kamçi; q.v. Cf.

early (xiv) l.-w. in Mong. (see Haenisch,

?D birle: 'with'; Gronbech in Der türkische Sprachbau, p. 35, describes this and üçün, ütze, and teg as the four old Turkish Postposns. also used as Adv.s; he analyses it as bir with 'emphatic' Particle -la, but there is no other trace of such a Particle. The word is obviously very old, and it seems more reasonable to analyse it as an abbreviated Ger. of a Den. V. fr. bir, birle:- which occurs as a V. meaning 'to unite' (Trans.) in Xwar. xiii(?) a.o.o. The y- began to be elided at an early date, producing the f. bile, but in some modern languages this has been further abraded and words quite unlike the original have resulted; a long list of these forms will be found in N. F. Katano, Opyt isledovaniya uryankhaiskogo yazska, Kazan, 1903, p. 151. Broadly speaking in NE the word survives more or less unchanged as in Tuv. bile or grossly deformed as in Khak. nuna; in SE farring records birle/bile/vile/birlen/ bilen/vllen; NC Kir. men/menen; Kz. ben/pen/men; SC Uzb. bilan; in NW all the forms found in NC as well as more conventional ones; SW Az., Osm. Ile; Tkm. bile/bilen. As a Postposn. bile: has much the same meanings (comitative, instrumental) as English 'with'. At some unknown date, but as early as Xak. it came to be used as an Adv. meaning 'even', and in Osm., while as a Postposn. it is ile, as an Adv. it is still bile, see Deny, Grammaire de la langue turque, Paris, 1920, para. 437. Türkii viii bile: 'with' occurs in a simple comitative sense, e.g. eğlim xağan bile: 'with my uncle the xağan' I E 17, II E 15, or with the indirect Obj. after verbs like 'to come to an agreement' I S 4,
"together", and less often as an Adv. meaning 'also' or 'even'.

they were pronounced differently. This word

VU burslan Hap. leg.; the text of Kaş. is rather incoherent but it seems prob. that this is merely a jingle to arslan and not an independent word. Xak. x1 burslan al-bahir fi haqiqati'l-lûğ a strictly speaking 'tiger', hence one says arslan burslan 'lion and tiger': burslan a masculine Proper Name; ta yaciz an yakân burslan taba'â(n) lia jingle then it could not be used as a Proper Name, because one does not say hâdalî-say' basan as one can say hasan basan (i.e. basan is a mere jingle and cannot be used otherwise) Kaş, III 418.

?F borsmak (?p-)'a badger'. In this form the word occurs only in Kaş, where it appears in a chapter devoted to Dissyllables containing three consecutive consonants, but is mis-vocalized. Its form is quite -Turkish and it is almost certainly a 1.-w., perhaps fr. Tokharian where the initial would necessarily have been p-. S.i.a.m.l.g., see Şcherbak, p. 139.

An unusually large number of modern forms start w. p- including NE Khak. persîx: NW Kk. persîk, Kumyk persûk: SW Az. persûq; Osm. persûk. The aberrant Tkm. form torsîk also has an unvoiced initial. These are all consistent w. the theory that it is a 1.-w. initial p- and so suggest that the modern V. borsî/-porsî- 'to smell foul' is a back-formation fr. this word and not its origin. D būrūs- Co-op. f. of būr-; s.i.m.m.l.g. sometimes with front and sometimes with back vowels; the modern V.s are often Intrans. and mean 'to be wrinkled' and the like, with a Caus. f. giving the Trans. meaning. The vowel shift must go back some way, since in the MS. of Kaş. there are two separate paras., the first giving the Trans. meaning with Infin. in -mek and the second giving the Intrans. meaning with Infin. in -mak but the second must be a scribal error. Xak. xi ol mapa: būrūsdi: 'he helped me to wrap round the waist-band' (fi kaffi' n-nayfaya); also used of anything which has a round opening and something surrounding it (lahu tadwir wa istidāra) like the top of a leather bag and the like (būrūšlīr, būrūšmek); and one says būrūšdi: nez ingaba'da-šay toa huwa nahu kulilih-wach 'the thing was drawn together, wrinkled', as the face in frowning (būrūšlur, būrūšmek, MS. -mak) Kaş. büşük 'carlidel'. S.i.m.m.l.g. with some phonetic changes; usually bešik, but in SE Türk büsük/büşük, Türkü vii S 6, II N 5 (üşg): Uyğ. viii ff. Chr. (he broke off a lump of stone for those Magi) taš bešikiniñ buluñun tamin üzmiş teği 'as if he had broken off the corner and side wall of the stone carlele' U I 7, 16-18: Xak. xii bešik malehul-sobi 'an infant's cradle' Kaš. I 408: 7 o.o., mainly with üğir- and its der.f.s bešik (twice), bešik (twice), bešik (three times): xiv Muh. al-mahd bešik Mel. 68, 12; Rif. 169: Çağ. xv ff. bešik gahwara 'cardele' in Ar. mahd San. 147r. 22 (quots.): Kip. xii 'a child's cradle (al-mahd) bešik (unvocalized) Hou. 18, 8; a.o. do. 11, 22 (bl): xiv bešik 'a small cradle (mahd), and in Kitâb Bebek al-sarin 'cradle' I'd. 33: a.o. do. 19 (üğrümük): xvi al-mahdul-la düações fah-l-leföl 'a cradle in which infants are kept' bešik Kaš. 64, 10; taxt 'bedstead' (taşçek) and bešik (glossed taxtul-leföl) Tuh. 8b. 12.

PU bešik a word, like tüşür, concerned with inter-clan marriage customs. In the end both words came to mean no more than 'a person who actually is, or possibly could become, a relation by marriage', but in the Mong. translation of the same text as that translated in TT VI the phr. corresponding to tüşür bešik in l. 308 is quda anda which is explained as follows in San. 284r. 5, quda is 'a tribe to which daughters are given in marriage' and anda (which also means generally 'friend, companion') is 'a tribe from which daughters are taken in marriage'. If the parallel is exact bešik must originally have had the latter meaning. It also occurs in the phr. adaş bešik and beşik both meaning 'blood relations and relations by marriage'. This word is not mentioned in the useful summary of terms of relationship, L. A. Pokrovskaia, 'Terminy rodstva v turkçeskih yazykakh' in Istoričeskoe razvitie leksiki tyurkshkh yazikov, Moscow, 1961. Pec. to Uyg. Uydg. vii ff. Bud. (the people of this country all look on one another as equals) "tunjur bosphuk bolusup kiz beriship bagir bosphug edgul oglu bolurlar' 'they are free to intermarry, they give one another their daughters in marriage, they are blood relations and relations by marriage, and are mutually well disposed" TT VI 308-9 (and see note thereon and o. in Index); (his father the king had asked the king of that country for the hand of his daughter for the Prince) tunjur bosphuk bolmis erdi 'they had become members of families who were free to intermarry' PP 64, 6 (and see footnote); adaq bosphuk U III 33, 17; U IV 46, 55 (ata-); bagir bosphug TT VI 105, etc. (bagir).

PU bosphug Hap. leg.; the general form of this word, which is listed between bitmull and bohorl is certain, but, since its semantic connection seems to be with either bosgue or bisa (bosphug) its spelling may be incorrect. It is morphologically obscure and is perhaps an honorific word. Xak. xi bosphug al-ragada minald-xubs 'a thin loaf of bread', bi-1ugati-l-Xaqaniya Kaq. I 481.

?F boyla: a high title, the exact significance of which is uncertain; except among the Proto-Bulgar, n.o.a.b. Among the Proto-Bulgar, where the word goes back to the earliest period, at least to early ix, the boyla: seems to have been next in rank to the xâgan, see O. Pritsak, Die bulgarischen Fürstenliste and die Sprache der Protobulgar, Wiesbaden, 1955, pp. 40, etc. The Western authorities point firmly to -o- as the first vowel. The word is very old, prob. pre-Turkish and possibly Hsiung-nu, but has not yet been traced in Chinese texts regarding that people. Türkî viii Tofûkuk Boyla: Bağa: Tarkan II S 14; T 6: Üyg. ix Boyla: Kutluğ Yargan Suci 2.

INITIAL DENTIPALATAL AFFRICATE

Preliminary note. Initial ç- is not very common in Turkish as an original initial. Although there is good evidence that both unvoiced ç and voiced c existed in the medial and final positions, there is no evidence that there was ever a voiced initial ç-, see Studies, pp. 167, 170. There are many Secondary initial ç-s, ç-y and j-s in some modern languages, usually representing an original y-, less often an original s- or t-, with some interchange between the three. Conversely in some languages ç- has become ş-. There are in Mong. and Pe. a good many words with initial ç- which have become l- tos in Turkish and have erroneously been regarded as native Turkish words.

Civ. documents; also used in Çâg. since such notes were issued by the Mongols in their western dominions. N.o.a.b. Uyg. vii ff. Civ. çaw is common in USp. and, like ch'ao, seems to mean sometimes an actual currency note and sometimes 'expressed in notes and not coin' (kümüs), e.g. 12, 5 alti yüz yastuk çaw 'notes for (or a sum of) 600 yastuks'; 12, 6 bu çawni 'this sum'; 15, 8 yeğirmi yastuk çaw tuwp baw çaw 'notes for twenty yastuks in heavy current copper coin' (Chinese ch'ung t'ung pao, Giles 2,880 12,294 8,720); the word transcribed çaw in 54, 9 etc. is the same word: Çâg. xv ff. çaw 'an oblong piece of paper which circulated instead of gold in the dominions of the Mongol ñans with a special mark and the name of the pâdisâh inscribed on it'. They conducted business with it. Waşâf in the second volume of his History in an account of the çaw which were current in the reign of Gayxatû Xan says that the shape and appearance of the çaw were as follows: around the face of an oblong piece of paper were written a number of words in Chinese characters, and at the top 'lâ ìlā tâlā ìlā ìlâh, Muhammed rasûlu ìlâh, a metallic coin' and below that was written irmeçîn mûra śmierci (a corrupt Mong. phr.) in an oval below the centre; they were in denominations from half a diran to ten dirârs and have become obsolete San. 209v. 10.

PU çîpûr 'goat's hair' with some extended meanings; as there is no trace of a Den. These forms suggest that the vowel was originally -ë-. As regards the final, strictly 'non-Turkish', -j- this is more likely to be a Sec. sound rather than an indication of foreign origin. If so, it was prob. dissimilated fr. -c and the evolution may have been *cēc > čēj > čēv > čeq/cūv > čūy. ?F čêtuk (femalene) cat’. The various Turkish words for ‘cat’ are collected in Schcherbak, p. 129. Some of them, e.g. maçaç, VU mûşq, and mışķiç, are demonstrably l.-w.s, and it is likely that the rest, including this one, which has no obvious etymology, are also l.-w.s. The Turks prob. did not meet cats early enough to have their own word for them. (Xak.) xiv Muh. al-sínmar ‘cat’ čêtuk Mel. 72; 6; čêtuk Rif. 174: Oğuz xi čêtuk al-hîrra ‘female cat’ (VU) kûwîk (unvocalized) čêtuk al-dàyvam ‘tom cat’ Kaš. 1388; s.o. ?E četken: Hap. leg.; the ordinary word for ‘bridle rein’ is tigîzn, which occurs twice in Kaš. but not as a main entry; if it had been a main entry it would have come between terkin and Taşken (place-name) two places before this word. It is possible that the text is in disorder and that tigîzn has dropped out and its translation been attached to this word, this may or may not have been given another meaning or perhaps merely inserted in the text to match the translation. Xak. xi çetken: 'inamîl-licâm 'bridge rein' Kaş. I 443.

çödîn s.i.a.m.l.g. with a bewildering variety of spellings—front and back vowels; -y/-î/-î/-i/-î/-î/-î/-y-g/-g-—from one of which came the l.-w. chuigan in Turkish. This and all the modern words mean 'cast iron' or the like. This is, however, likely not to have been the original meaning; al-qîr normally means 'copper' (which is not in point here, since copper was bakîr) or 'brass', and the latter, or rather 'bronze', is the likeliest material for a cooking pot in xi. çak- like I çak of an onomatopoeic character and used to describe action of a violent character, physical or mental, e.g. 'to strike fire (with a flint and steel); (of a snake or scorpion) to bite, sting; to slander, decry, betray'. 1 çık- 'to go out; to come out'. S.i.a.m.n.g. with a wide range of extended meanings esp. in SW. It is no doubt fortuitous that neither çık- nor çıkar- are noted before xı. The theory propounded in Oq., p. 27, note 27 that that is a crasis of tašık- is quite unconvincing. Xak. xı er evdin çıkdu: 'the man went out (xaraca) of the house (etc.)' Kaş. 1/7 (prov.; no Lar. or Infin.); 1/16 (tašık-) and about a dozen o.o. çık- originally (of a bird) 'to swoop down (on something Dat.); to peck, peck out' with various extended meanings. S.i.a.m.I.g.: the modern phonetics are confusing; it is nearly always lengthened to çoki-çoku- (soki/-soku-, etc.) but in NC Kir. both çök- and çoku- occur with slightly different shades of meaning and in Kax. çök- and şök-. There do not seem to be any other genuine occurrences of u- in the verb (both Uzb. -u- and Kaz. -u- represent earlier -o-) but there is what seems to be a Dev. N./A. in -u meaning 'hole, cavity, depression; hollowed out, deep' which first appears in Çag. San. 214r. 6 and Kip. Id. 44; Tuḥ. 11b. 12; 12b. 11 and s.i.a.m.I.g. as çukur (şukur, etc.). See Coşur III 1099. This must surely be der. fr. this Verb; so too is SE Türkî çokur 'pitted with small-pox', unless this is a Sec. f. of çotur. Uyg. vii ff. Bud. Xak. xi [er] boğ çığildi: * Şu'da'ir-rizma b'il-fūnāb 'the parcel was tied with rope (and the like)' Kas. II 133 (çığilur, çığilmak).

D çığil- Pass. f. of 1 çığ- used only as an Impersonal V.; survives in the same idiom in NC Kir. çığil-; SW Osm. çığil-. Xak. xi evdin çığildi: 'an exit was made (xurica) from the house (etc.)' Kas. II 133 (çığilur, çığilmak).

DF çığla:- Hap. leg.; Den. V. fr. 2 çığ-. Xak. xi ol bóż çığla'di: 'he measured the cotton cloth in Turkish cubits (bi-dir'a turki) Kas. III 256 (çığlar, çığlamak).

D çığla:- prob. an abbreviated form of çığla:-, q.v., rather than a Dev. V. fr. *çoğ as a Sec. f. of çığ. Xak. xi çığla'di: like çarla'di: (q.v.) fi sīyāhīl-fīl, 'of the trumpeting of an elephant' Kas. III 295 (çoğlar, çoğlamak): KB ke'liir çgaylur az ğeç terk ăn (this world) 'comes and shouts a little, but its voice quickly dies away' 5314: (Xwar. xii çoğla:- 'to shout to one another' 'Ali 40.

D çığla:- Den. V. fr. çığ-; 'to wrap, pack up', and the like. Survives as such in NE Leb. çığla- R III 2170; Tel. çığla- do. 2175; the cental consonants were metathesized in the medieval period and the metathesized form, with some phonetic changes, s.i.m.m.l.g.; in SE Türkî both forms occur çığla/-çığla/-çığla- farring 77, 97. Xak. xi ol tonuq çığla'di: 'he tied up the garment and wrapped it and made it into a parcel' (dabbara ... wa 'abḥāwu wa razzamahu) Kas. III 295 (çoğlar, çoğlamak): KB (true words are harsh) ĭrîg ç gåliamiş 'he has wrapped up the harshness' 3847: xrv Muh. çığla:- Mel. 35, 1 (i bük-): Çağ. xv ff. çûlga- ('with ç') piştdan 'to wind, wrap' San. 214r. 28: Xwar. xiii çûla:- 'to wrap' 'Ali 50: xiv ditvo Nahec. 8, 8; 9, 9.

DF çığlaç- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of çığlaç-. Xak. xi ol böç çığlaçtti: 'he told the man to measure the cotton cloth in Turkish cubits'; a Turkish cubit is two-thirds of an (ordinary) cubit Kas. II 345 (çığlatrur, çığlatmak).

D çığlat- Hap. leg.; Caus. f. of çığlaç-. Xak. xi ol to'nun çığlat:' he ordered (someone) to wrap up his garment' (the translation hamala min ğa'yri fa'wîhi is corrupt) Kas. II 345 (çığlatur, çığlatmak).

D çığlat- Caus. f. of çığlaç:-; s.i.s.m.l. as çığlat-. Xak. xi ol to'nun çığlaç'tt: 'he ordered (someone) to wrap up his garment' (the translation hamala min ğa'yri fa'wîhi is corrupt) Kas. II 345 (çığlatur, çığlatmak).

D çığlaç- Hap. leg.; vocalized çığlaç- but obviously Refl. f. of çığil-; 'to flare up', Kas.'s translation is very free. Xak. xi âmîn menîn budursin: ote: anîç çakînûr (çaklûnur) it describes his love and says 'my heart is like a quail and revolles (on a spit) over the fire of love for him' (yatagallab 'alā nār hubbīhi) Kaṣ. I 513, 5; n.m.e.

DF I čīglan- Ḥap. leg.; Relf. f. of čīglan-; the word is actually spelt čīglan-but is used in a para. regarding the meanings of Relf. Den. V.s fr. 'trilateral' words, which implies čīg-. Xak. xi bōč čīglan: dūrīzalʾ-l-kībah 'the cotton cloth was measured in [Turkish] cubits' Kaṣ. III 198, 19; n.m.e.

D 2 čīglan- Ḥap. leg.; vocalized čīglan- but this must be an error. This is clearly a Relf. Den. V. of 3 čīg (čīg) and syn. with čīlan-q.v., so is anachronistic in Kaṣ.; as there is no Aor. or Infin. it was prob. inserted by a later hand. Survives in NW Kaz. čīglan: 'to be moist, wet' R III 206a. Cf. čavla-. Xak. xi čīt čīglan: talahwacalʾ-lahm 'the meat was half cooked' (i.e. still moist) Kaṣ. II 245.

D čoğlan- (čoğlan-)/čoğlan- Ḥap. leg.; Relf. Den. V. fr. čoğ-. Kaṣ. xi oč čoğlan: 'the fire was scorching hot' (ttalahva) also used of the sun when its scorching rays (lubāhāhū, mis-spelt hūʾahā) fall Kaṣ. II 245 (čoğlanur, čoğlanmak sic).

D čuğlan- (čuğlan-)/čuğlan- Relf. f. of čuğla-; Kaṣ.'s translation in the main entry is metaphor. S.i.s.m.lg. as čuğlan- 'to be wrapped', etc. Xak. xi šū ka:nuq čuğlan: 'a l'c-eʿlind bi-gadžihi wā gadižihi 'the army came in a solid mass'; also used of anything that when they gather together (iaʾallabā) Kaṣ. II 245 (čuğlanur, čuğlanmak); (in the same para. as I čiğlan-, q.v.) tavar čuğlan: (sic) razinaʾl-mita: 'the merchandise was packed up' III 198, 18; xiv Muḥ. laffa (? lūf'a) 'to wrap up' (to be wrapped up) čuğlan- Mel. 31, I (only; Rif. 115 see saru-): Čağ. xv ff., čuğlān-čuğlaš- pīqda šūdan 'to be wrapped' San. 214v. 9: Xwar. xiv čuğlan- 'to be wrapped' (in something Dat.) Quṭb 44 (also čuğlāt, -čuğlaš- and čuğlaš- 'to curl up like a snake'); Kom. xiv 'to be wrapped' (in swaddling clothes) čuğlan- CGG; Gr. 77 (quon.).

Tris. CGL
I čuğlāva:r obviously a 1.-w. prob. Iranian, since -vār is a common Iranian suffix. It seems clear that this means 'cross-bow'; cross-bow arrows are shorter than ordinary arrows, and this explains Kaṣ.'s translation. The cross-bow was not a native Turkish weapon. In the form in Muḥ. -m may be a scribal error for -v- or a Sec. sound. Xak. xi čuğlāva:r oki: al-ḥusba:na wa hiya l-shāmaʾl-gisār 'short arrows' Kaṣ. I 493 (verse): xiv Muḥ.(?) qwasū-l-caξ 'cross-bow' čuğlumarr (unvocalized) Rif. 173 (only).

Tris. V. CGL-
D čuğla:-/čuğla:- Den. V. fr. čuğl/:čuğl/: n.o.a.h., but the shorter form čuğla- occurs in SW Osm. and longer forms like čuğlda-, čuğlda- in several modern languages. Xak.

xi er čuğlaːdːiː 'the man screamed and shouted' (ya:kaba ... wa sāha) (čuğlar, čuğlumak); also pronounced čuğlaːdːiː; one says suv čuğlaːdːiː: 'the water babbled' (xarriː); čuğlaːdːiː, čuğlaːdːiː: both dialect forms (luğa) (čuğlar, čuğlumak) Kaṣ. III 324 (verse containing čuğlaːdːiː: xasaba and Jaːglalal; (blood flowed) bi-xarir ha-xariri-l-māːː): xiv Muḥ. xariru-l-māː su: čuğlaːmak Mel. 73, 13; Rif. 176.

D čakmak Conc. N. fr. čak-; 'a strike-a-light, flint and steel'. S.i.a.m.lg. except NE which uses forms of otluk (cf. I otlūq). See Doerfer III 1097. Xak. xi čakmak 'the strike-a-light' (al-zand) with which (fire) is struck; it is both a Noun and an Infin. like camd and camid (sic) in Ar. Kaṣ. I 469; o.o. II 17 (čak-); 133 (čakul, etc.): xiv Muḥ. al-miqdāha 'a steel' čakmak Mel. 58, 14; Rif. 169; čağ. xv ff. čakmak filadāl-i δaγza-nā 'a steel for striking fire', in Ar. gaddāha and miqdāha San. 257v. 21 (quon.): Xwar. xiv ditto Quṭb 41: Kp. xii al-zinād čakmak Id. 17, 17: xiv čakmak (c-) al-gaddāla Id. 44: xv al-zinād čakmak (sic) Kav. 64, 8.

VUF čukmūn Ḥap. leg.; l.w. fr. Chinese, the second syllable perhaps man 'steamed dumplings' (Giles 7,639). Xak. xi čukmūn 'a loaf (suva) made in the shape of a cake' (al-haːk) and cooked in steam in a cooking pot; it is the wholesome (amra) form of bread Kaṣ. I 444.

čağmūr 'turnip, Brassica rapa'; although this spelling is pcc. to Kaṣ. it is prob. the original one, cf. yağmūr. Survives as çamgūr in SE Türk 'turnip' Shaw 96; Jarring 64; 'radish' BS 239 and SW xx Anat. 'turnip' SSD 246, but in most languages displaced by Pe. şalcam. Xak. xi çagmūr al-lift 'turnip' Kaṣ. I 16, 21; çagmūr al-salcam; çamgür the same, metathesized I 457.

Tris. V. CGM-
PUD çokmaklan- Ḥap. leg.; as this word occurs between tiğtraklan- and çamgūklan- the -c- and -klan- can be taken as certain, but there is no semantic connection with čok-. the semantic connection is rather with čuğ- a connection with čuğ is morphologically impossible, but note the Xwar. meaning of čuğās- (čuğlan-). Xak. yīlan çokmaklan- 'the snake curled up and wound itself up' (taralhāt .. wa istadārat) Kaṣ. II 275 (çokmaklanur, çokmaklanmak).
